The people can only rule by having the right of direct legislation which they may exercise at their option. They do not wish to exercise this right except in important cases. They prefer their representatives to make, judge, and execute the law. It is only when their representatives fail to represent the people that the people would care to exercise direct power. By arranging that the people may exercise direct power at their option, the representatives would make it unnecessary for the people to exercise this power, because the big stick of public opinion, being available through the initiative and referendum and recall, the legislator, the judge, the administrative officer will represent matured public opinion to the best of his limited understanding, and generally in a satisfactory manner.

Our President elect, Woodrow Wilson, although at one time regarding the initiative and referendum as unnecessary and unsuitable, came to change his mind substantially about it for the same reason that other thoughtful men changed their minds, and are daily changing their minds, on this great question; and that is, for the reason that you can not get the economic and humane reforms desired for the welfare of the race until you overthrow the machine and establish righteous and responsive government by giving the people a mechanism through which the public conscience and public intelligence can act. On August 26, 1911, in the Outlook, Gov. Wilson said:

For 15 years I taught my classes that the initiative and referendum wouldn't work. I can prove it now; but the trouble is they do. * * * Back of all other reforms lies the means of getting it. Back of the question, What do we want? is the question, How are we going to get it? The immediate thing we have got to do is to resume popular government. * * * We are cleaning house, and in order to clean house the one thing we need is a good broom. The initiative and referendum are good brooms.

And Theodore Roosevelt, before the Ohio constitutional convention on April 21, 1912, said:

I believe in the initiative and referendum, which should be used not to destroy representative government, but to correct it whenever it becomes misrepresentative.

United States Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, has said:

In my judgment the public interests would be promoted if a majority of the voters possessed the option of directing by ballot the action of their representatives on any important issue, under proper regulations, insuring full discussion and mature consideration upon such issue by the voters prior to balloting thereon.

United States Senator JONATHAN BOURNE, of Oregon, has said:

The initiative and referendum is the keystone of the arch of popular government, for by means of this the people may accomplish such other reforms as they desire. The initiative develops the electorate, because it encourages study of principles and policies of government and affords the originator of new ideas in government an opportunity to secure popular judgment upon his measures. The referendum prevents abuses of the power temporarily centralized in the legislature.

United States Senator MOSES E. CLAPP, in San Francisco in 1911, said:

The initiative and referendum I regard as more than monitorial. If the American people are going to make a success of free government, they have got to take an interest in government. These measures are a thousand times more valuable as an educational and inspirational force, great as their monitorial value may be. They open an avenue to the voter, so that he does not have to ask any political boss permission to air his views.

Gov. John F. Shafroth, about to enter the Senate as the Senator from Colorado, said:

The initiative and referendum places the Government nearer to the people, and that has always been the aim of the framers of all republican forms of government.

Gov. Hiram W. Johnson, of California, the recent candidate for Vice President of the United States, and who received over 4,000,000 votes, said in his inaugural address before the California Legislature:

I commend to you the proposition that after all the initiative and referendum depend upon our confidence in the people and their ability to govern. The opponents of direct legislation and the recall, however they may phrase their opposition, in reality believe the people can not be trusted. * * * We who espouse these measures do so because of our deep-rooted belief * * * not only in the right of the people to govern but in their ability to govern.

Judge Ben B. Lindsay, of Denver, recently said in the Toledo News-Bee:

It is hard for me to understand how anyone familiar with the methods of the great privileged interests of the country in controlling courts and legislatures could fail to be an enthusiastic supporter of the initiative and referendum.

Prof. Franklin H. Giddings, of Columbia University, in an address before the City Club of Philadelphia on March 23, 1912, said:

I believe that the people of the United States are changing their form of government somewhat by introducing such new measures as the referendum, the initiative, the recall, and the direct primary, in part because their interests have become largely new, in part because of real restiveness under existing conditions, but in part also because, to an extent never before seen in our history, the people are now thinking about things, whereas during a great part of our political history they have thought not about things but only about candidates.

And Dr. Charles A. Beard, associate professor of politics in Columbia University, said:

* * * anxiety for the preservation of representative institutions need not lead anyone into the extreme view that the initiative and referendum are incompatible with them. They do not destroy representative government, neither is there any indication, nor anything in the nature of things, showing that they can destroy such government.

Switzerland has this system in excellent working order, and many of our American States have adopted it for the reasons which I have briefly suggested.

AN ANSWER TO THE ARGUMENT IN FAVOR OF SENATE RESOLUTION 413.

Mr. President, I shall now directly answer the proposals of Senate resolution 413, that the initiative and referendum as established or proposed in the American States is in conflict with the representative principle on which this Republic was founded and would work a radical change in the character of our Government.

The argument made by the then Senator from Texas on this point is that the language used by certain "representative" citizens in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 would argue that they thought the Government of the United States was intended to be "a representative democracy" and not a monarchy, an aristocracy, or a "pure democracy."

Conceding that these gentlemen made the illuminating remarks attributed to them, after all, what they said is immaterial and irrelevant.

The remarks of Charles Pinckney, or Madison, or Hamilton, or of Fisher Ames, or of Ellsworth, or of Pendleton, in secret convention or elsewhere, are unimportant in the presence of the actual history and constitutions of the 48 States, even if any accidental phrase or opinion emanating from any of these excellent gentlemen had relevancy, which they have not.

Some of these men suggested the importance of people in thickly settled communities delegating to representatives their governing powers as a matter of necessary convenience, and the wisdom of this observation no man disputes. Some of them pointed out that a "pure democracy" was not practicable or wise in a country such as ours, and to this proposal no advocate of the optional initiative and referendum, which is the only form proposed in America, takes issue.

Mr. LODGE has the precaution upon further study of this question to discuss the "compulsory initiative and referendum" (at Princton, March 8, 1912), which is not an issue in the United States, and he thereby practically concedes that he has no adequate argument against the optional "initiative and referendum," the only form suggested in this country.

The compulsory initiative and referendum would mean that the people would be compelled to pass on every law, which is not suggested by anyone as suitable in a Republic of 90,000,000 people. Mr. LODGE'S escape through the "compulsory door" is ludicrous and a humorous side light on his estimate of the ignorance of his Princeton audience.

Even if Madison and Pinckney and Hamilton had known what the modern initiative and referendum is and had opposed it in specific terms, their opinions would be of no importance. We might as well go back to 1787, a hundred and twenty-five years, and have them tell us how to devise a telegraph system, or to invent a telephone system, or to send messages 3,000 miles through the air without wires, or to run railway trains at 60 miles the hour, or to construct a Maurctania for the high seas. These innocent old gentlemen would fall dead with astonishment if they could see the conditions of modern life. They are not qualified to instruct us in statecraft.

The then Senator from Texas makes a crafty appeal to the sense of reverence which all men have for their ancestors, and then tries to argue that our ancestors were opposed to the initiative and referendum. The answer to all this is that our ancestors did not have the slightest idea what the modern optional initiative and referendum is; in the second place, our ancestors expressed no opposition to the modern optional initiative and referendum; and, in the third place, our ancestors had no conception of how a representative democracy could fall into the control of organized greed through the use of a political machine. They never considered the possibility of such a thing, and if they were to have the present facts before them they would probably support unanimously the initiative and referendum in order to perfect the representative system.

These ancestral statesmen, who met together in the seclusion of closed doors to discuss the framing of a Federal Constitution, were men as a rule of strongly reactionary sentiment. Two-thirds of them were quite thoroughly undemocratic; such leading Democrats as Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Adams, Patrick Henry, et al., were conspicuous by their absence. The debates were behind closed doors, in secret conclave, no member allowed to report or copy any of its proceedings, which were kept profoundly a secret for 50 years, until all the actors were dead. No wonder this profound secrecy was demanded and observed, for the 65 members of this convention were not authorized to draft a constitution, but merely to propose amendments to the Articles of Confederation, and in drafting the Constitution they were guilty of usurpation of political power.

The undemocratic character of the men who got into this constitutional convention is demonstrated by numerous secret speeches made by them when in that convention, and which they believed would never be known by the people.

Elbridge Gerry, for example, declared—that democracy was the worst of all political evils. (Elliott's Debates, vol. 5, p. 557.)

Edmund Randolph observed, in tracing the political evils of this country to their origin, "that every man (in convention) had found it in the turbulence and follies of democracy."

Hamilton urged a permanent Senate "to check the imprudence of democracy."

Madison thought the Constitution "ought to secure the permanent interests of the country against innovation." (Elliott's Debates, vol. 1, p. 450.)

And Madison, in the Federalist, warned the people against "the superior force of an interested and overbearing majority."

And these distinguished gentlemen from whom the then Senator from Texas quotes with such gusto made a Constitution practically unamendable by the people, and failed to put into the Constitution a bill of rights and the fundamental principles of liberty contained in the Declaration of Independence.

James Allen Smith, professor of political science, University of Washington, well says:

From all evidence that we have, the conclusion is irresistible that they sought to establish a form of government which would effectually curb and restrain democracy. They engrafted upon the Constitution so much of the features of popular government as was, in their opinion, sufficient to insure its adoption.

And James Bryce makes a similar comment on their work. In speaking of checks and balances devised in the Federal Constitution Mr. Bryce says:

Those who invented this machinery of checks and balances were anxious not so much to develop public opinion as to resist and build up brick walls against it. * * * "The prevalent conception of popular opinion was that it was aggressive, revolutionary, unreasoning, passionate, futile, and a breeder of mob violence." (American Commonwealth, Morris ed., 1906, p. 260.)

The convention of July 4, 1776, and the Declaration of Independence was thoroughly democratic. The Constitution of the United States, drawn by the reactionaries 11 years afterwards, was thoroughly undemocratic in numerous particulars, to some of which I shall call attention.

There were only 65 members of this secret convention; only 55 members attended and only 39 members signed it, and they were nearly all reactionaries.

The Constitution they submitted was undemocratic in the following particulars:

First. The Constitution permitted a life President.

Second. The Constitution did not provide for the nomination or election of the President by the people, but by electors far removed from the people.

Third. The Constitution did not provide for the nomination or election of Senators by the people.

Fourth. The Constitution provided for an uncontrolled judiciary (by possible interpretation), in striking contrast to the laws of every State in the Union, including Utah.

Fifth. A minority of the House (34 per cent) can prevent the majority proposing an amendment to the Constitution. A minority of the Senate (34 per cent) can prevent the majority proposing an amendment to the Constitution. A President can prevent a majority of both Houses proposing an amendment to the Constitution. A small minority of the States (26 per cent) can prevent the amendment of the Constitution.

Sixth. No provision for the adoption of the Constitution was arranged by popular vote.

And some of the delegates who approved the Constitution from Virginia at least disobeyed the instructions of the people.

Seventh. The Constitutional Convention usurped the power in framing the Constitution.

They were only authorized to prepare amendments to the Articles of Confederation, not frame a new Constitution.

Eighth. The Constitution did not protect the right of free speech.

Ninth. The Constitution did not protect the right of free religion.

Tenth. It did not protect the freedom of the press.

Eleventh. It did not protect the right of the people to peaceably assemble.

Twelfth. It did not protect the right of the people to petition the Government for the righting of grievances.

Thirteenth. It did not protect the right of the States to have troops.

Fourteenth. It did not protect the right of the people to keep and bear arms.

Fifteenth. It did not protect the people against the quartering of soldiers upon them without their consent.

Sixteenth. It did not protect the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures nor against warrants, except upon suitable safeguards.

Seventeenth. It did not protect the people against being held for crime, except on indictment.

Eighteenth. It did not protect the people against a second trial for the same offense.

Nineteenth. It did not protect an accused against being compelled to be a witness against himself.

Twentieth. It did not protect the citizen against being deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

Twenty-first. It did not protect private property being taken for public use without just compensation.

Twenty-second. It did not secure, in criminal prosecutions, the right of a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury in the place where the crime was committed.

Twenty-third. It did not protect the accused in the right to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation, of the right to be confronted with the witnesses against him, of the right to have compulsory processes in obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel in his defense.

Twenty-fourth. It did not protect the right of the citizen in common-law suits to a trial by jury.

Twenty-fifth. It did not protect the citizen against excessive bail, against excessive fines, nor against cruel and unusual punishments.

Twenty-sixth. It did not safeguard the rights reserved by the people against invasion by the Federal Government.

Twenty-seventh. The Constitution is undemocratic in making no provision for its subsequent amendment by direct popular vote, although this was the method of the various States.

The ratification of this undemocratic Constitution was only obtained with the greatest difficulty, and in no States was it submitted to the people themselves for a direct vote.

Massachusetts, South Carolina, New Hampshire, Virginia, and New York demanded amendments; North Carolina and Rhode Island at first rejected the Constitution, and except for the agreement to adopt the first 10 amendments and make it more democratic, it would have assuredly failed.

George Washington, as president of the convention, was debarred from sharing in the debates. The Constitution had one very great merit, it established the Union; it had one very great demerit, it was grossly undemocratic. But it was not as undemocratic as some modern statesmen would make it appear. For instance, it did not formally prevent the recall of judges, but provided that judges should hold office "during good behavior," and placed the entire executive power in the hands of a President, and the legislative power in the hands of Congress, both of whom, in my judgment, have the power of removing any Federal judge upon the ground of a high crime and misdemeanor or for any bad behavior and without impeachment.

It was not so undemocratic as to deny the right of direct taxation of private citizens by an income tax, although the Supreme Court of the United States so misinterpreted the Constitution.

The Constitution says:

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

The enumeration referred to is as follows:

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians, not taxed, three-fifths of all persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and then every subsequent term of 10 years in such manner as they shall by law direct.

The inhibition of a direct tax by the clause above referred to relates alone to a direct tax on a sovereign State.

I have heretofore fully shown this by its history, by the Constitutional Convention debates, and by the other parts of the Constitution and its interpretation by all departments of Government.

If this clause of the Constitution were written out in full, it would read:

No capitation tax against a sovereign State or other direct tax against a sovereign State shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration of the population of such States hereinbefore directed to be taken.

The Supreme Court of the United States, misled by fallacious arguments, interpreted this clause so as to make it read:

No capitation tax against a sovereign State or other direct tax against a private citizen shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration of the population of the States hereinbefore directed to be taken.

And on this interpretation held that an income tax, being a direct tax on a citizen, was inhibited by this clause of the Constitution.

Such an interpretation of above clause of the Constitution is incongruous and absurd. It is incongruous to interpret the clause to jump from a State to the citizen as its subject. It is absurd to say the clause intended to forbid a direct tax on a private citizen unless in proportion to the census. The United States has always directly taxed its citizens and does so now, so that this interpretation by the Supreme Court is in direct conflict with the historical and as yet unbroken interpretation of the Constitution. The Constitution of the United States, while undemocratic, was not as undemocratic as this.

We do not need to be advised by the undemocratic Alexander Hamilton, nor by the undemocratic members in this secret conclave of 1787, as to the true principles of democracy. These principles are abundantly set forth in the Declaration of Independence and in the constitutions of the 48 States, and show beyond the peradventure of a doubt that the people of the various States intended to preserve their liberties by retaining in their own hands the sovereign powers of government, and this is abundantly shown by the plain words of the Declaration of Independence and of the constitutions of the 48 States.

The then Senator from Texas lays great stress upon the opinions of several of the reactionaries in the secret conclave of 1787, in which 39 "unauthorized" delegates, selected by the legislatures before a constitutional convention was suggested, framed a constitution that still ties the hands and interferes with the liberty of 90,000,000 of human beings to freely govern themselves.

In point of fact there were about 3,000,000 people in America at that time outside of the secret conclave at Philadelphia, where certain "representatives" were embezzling power "for the good of the people."

These 3,000,000 people outside of the little Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia had some very sound opinions on human liberty and on freedom. These were the people who fought the war with Great Britain and established their independence and who proposed to keep it by not setting up any rulers over themselves or any laws over themselves which they could not at any time amend, alter, or abolish. The people of the United Colonies were all right and were believers in popular government and practiced it, and wrote it in their constitutions. Alexander Hamilton and some other reactionaries sympathizing with him were fundamental Tories and at heart opposed to popular government.

The principle on which this Republic was founded was not the representative principle (an incident of the people's basic power), but was the principle of popular sovereignty, the principle that all power was vested in the people by an inalienable right, indefensible, and that the people had the right at any time to exercise this sovereign power.

The Unanimous Declaration of the Thirteen United States of America, issued July 4, 1776, said:

We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness.

This declaration is a declaration in effect that all powers of government emanate directly from the people. And this right is reiterated in the constitution of almost every State in the Union, declaring in various forms that all powers of government spring directly from the people. For example:

ALABAMA.

1819: "All political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit, and therefore they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may deem expedient."

ARKANSAS.

1836: "That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness. For the advancement of these ends they have, at all times, an unqualified right to alter, reform, or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper."

CALIFORNIA.

1849: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

COLORADO.

1876: "That all political power is vested in and derived from the people; that all government of right originates from the people, is founded upon their will only, and is instituted solely for the good of the whole."

CONNECTICUT.

1818: "That all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit, and they have at all times an undeniable and indefeasible right to alter their form of government in such a manner as they may think expedient."

DELAWARE.

1792: "All just authority in the institutions of political society is derived from the people and established with their consent to advance their happiness, and they may for this end as circumstances require, from time to time, alter their constitution of government."

FLORIDA.

1838: "That all political power is inherent in the people, and free governments are founded on their authority and established for their benefit, and therefore they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may deem expedient."

GEORGIA.

1777: "We, therefore, the representatives of the people, from whom all power originates and for whose benefit all government is intended, by virtue of the power delegated to us, do ordain and declare, and it is hereby ordained and declared, that the following rules and regulations be adopted for the future government of this State."

IDAHO.

1889: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right to alter, reform, or abolish the same when- ever they may deem it necessary, and no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted that may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the legislature."

ILLINOIS.

1818: "That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness."

INDIANA.

1816: "That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and well being. For the advancemnt of these ends the people have at all times an unalienable and indefeasible right to alter and reform their government in such manner as they may think proper."

IOWA.

1846: "That all political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right at all times to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

KANSAS.

1855: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right to alter, reform, or abolish the same whenever they may deem it necessary, and no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted that may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the general assembly."

KENTUCKY.

1792: "That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness. For the advancement of these ends they have at all times an unalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their government in such manner as they may think proper."

LOUISIANA.

1868: "All men are created free and equal and have certain inalienable rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

MAINE.

1819: "All power is inherent in the people; all free governments are founded in their authority and instituted for their benefit; they have, therefore, an unalienable and indefeasible right to institute government and to alter, reform or totally change the same, when their safety and happiness require it."

MARYLAND.

1776: "That all government of right originates from the people, is founded in compact only and instituted solely for the good of the whole."

MASSACHUSETTS.

The first constitution submitted in Massachusetts was rejected by the people by direct vote at town meetings in the spring of 1779, because it contained no bill of rights, and for other reasons. The next constitution submitted, that of 1780, the people adopted by direct vote at town meetings and by more than two-thirds of all who voted. The bill of rights declares:

BILL OF RIGHTS.

1780: "ARTICLE I. All men are born free and equal, and have certain natural, essential, and inalienable rights; among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; in fine, that of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness.

"ART. IV. The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State, and do, and forever shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not, or may not hereafter be, by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled.

"ART. V. All power residing originally in the people, and being derived from them, the several magistrates and officers of government vested with authority, whether legislative, executive, or judicial, are their substitutes and agents and are at all times accountable to them."

MICHIGAN.

1835: "All political power is inherent in the people.

"Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people; and they have the right at all times to alter or reform the same and to abolish one form of government and establish another whenever the public good requires it."

MINNESOTA.

1857: "Government is instituted for the security, benefit, and protection of the people, in whom all political power is inherent, together with the right to alter, modify, or reform such government whenever the public good may require it."

MISSISSIPPI.

1817: "That all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit, and therefore they have at all times an unalienable and indefeasible right to alter or abolish their form of government in such manner as they may think expedient."

MISSOURI.

1820: "That all political power is vested in and derived from the people."

MONTANA.

1889: "All political power is vested in and derived from the people; all government of right originates with the people, is founded upon their will only, and is instituted solely for the good of the whole."

NEBRASKA.

1866–67: "All men are born equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights; among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

NEVADA.

1864: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

In New Hampshire four constitutions were submitted to the people, who voted directly upon them at town meetings. The first three were rejected (American Political Science Review, Vol. II, p. 549) largely because there were no express limitations upon the power of the legislature—no bill of rights. The bill of rights of the fourth one, that of 1784, declares:

1784: "VII. The people of this State have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State, and do, and forever hereafter shall, exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right pertaining thereto which is not or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled."

NEW JERSEY.

The New Jersey constitution of 1776 declares:

1776: "Whereas all the constitutional authority ever possessed by the Kings of Great Britain over these Colonies or their other dominions was, by compact, derived from the people and held of them for the common interest of the whole society, allegiance and protection are, in the nature of things reciprocal ties, each equally depending upon the other and liable to be dissolved by the others being refused or withdrawn. And whereas George III, King of Great Britain, has refused protection to the good people of these Colonies, and, by assenting to sundry acts of the British Parliament, attempted to subject them to the absolute dominion of that body, and has also made war upon them in the most cruel and unnatural manner for no other cause than asserting their just rights, all civil authority under him is necessarily at an end and a dissolution of government in each Colony has consequently taken place."

NEW YORK.

The New York bill of rights of 1777 declares:

1777: "I. This convention, therefore, in the name and by the authority of the good people of this State, doth ordain, determine, and declare that no authority shall, on any pretense whatever, be exercised over the people or members of this State but such as shall be derived from and granted by them."

NORTH CAROLINA.

1776: "That all political power is vested in and derived from the people only."

NORTH DAKOTA.

1889: "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for the protection, security, and benefit of the people, and they have a right to alter or reform the same when the public good may require."

OHIO.

1802: "That all men are born equally free and independent, and have certain natural, inherent, and inalienable rights * * * and every free republican government being founded on their sole authority, and organized for the great purpose of protecting their rights and liberties and securing their independence; to effect these ends, they have at all times a complete power to alter, reform, or abolish their government whenever they may deem it necessary."

OKLAHOMA.

1907: "All political power is inherent in the people; and government is instituted for their protection, security, and benefit, and to promote their general welfare; and they have the right to alter or reform the same whenever the public good may require it."

OREGON.

1857: "That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness, and they have at all times a right to alter, reform, or abolish the government in such manner as they may think proper."

PENNSYLVANIA.

1776: "That the people of this State have the sole, exclusive, and inherent right of governing and regulating the internal police of the same.

"That all power being originally inherent in, and consequently derived from, the people; therefore all officers of government, whether legislative or executive, are their trustees and servants, and at all times accountable to them."

RHODE ISLAND.

1842: "The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

1790: "All power is originally vested in the people; and all free governments are founded on their authority and are instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness."

SOUTH DAKOTA.

1889: "All men are born equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, of acquiring and protecting property, and a pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

TENNESSEE.

1796: "That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness; for the advancement of those ends they have at all times an unalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish the government in such manner as they may think proper."

TEXAS (REPUBLIC).

1836: "All political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit; and they have at all times an unalienable right to alter their government in such manner as they may think proper."

TEXAS (STATE).

1889: "All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness; for the advancement of these ends, they have at all times an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish the government in such manner as they may think proper."

THE PEOPLE BETTER AUTHORITY THAN HAMILTON OR PINCKNEY.

Mr. President, here it will be observed that the people in the States declare all political power vested in and derived from the people, and that they have an inalienable and indefeasible right to alter, amend, or abolish, their form of government in such manner as they may deem expedient. So that we do not need the quotations from a few reactionary citizens who were disobeying their representative instructions in the secret conclave of 1787 to tell us what the Constitution and the law is.

It is rather astonishing to hear from various men of learning that the right of the people to legislate directly is unconstitutional; that it is "in conflict with the representative principle on which this Republic is founded."

This is the same old federalist argument that was answered in the Supreme Court of Oregon in the Pacific Telephone case, where it was urged that the Federal guarantee to the State of a republican form of government would forbid the initiative and referendum as in conflict with a republican form of government or with the so-called representative principle. (Exhibit B answers this argument.)

The adoption of the constitution of Texas was an act of direct legislation by the people of Texas by the referendum on the initiative of the constitutional convention.

And all of the State constitutions, almost without exception, have been adopted by the act of the people who directly legislated in establishing these various State constitutions by the referendum.

And they amend all the constitutions in the same fashion—by direct legislation, almost without exception.

James Bryce, in his American Commonwealth (Morris Edition, 1906, p. 258), very properly says:

> The people frequently legislate directly by enacting or altering a constitution. The principle of popular sovereignty could hardly be expressed more unmistakably. Allowing for the differences to which the vast size of the country gives rise, the mass of citizens may be deemed as directly the supreme power in the United States as the assembly was at Athens or Syracuse.

Indeed, from the beginning of the history of the American people they exercised the right of direct legislation, and exercised it in the old town meetings of New England and county meetings in the South. The Massachusetts towns still govern themselves by exercising the right of direct legislation in their town meetings, both the initiative and the referendum.

And all the States of the Union from time to time have provided for the exercise of the right of direct legislation by various forms of local option.

To deny the right of the people to legislate directly is to deny the fundamental principles of every one of the 48 State constitutions. The "representative principle," so called, is merely an incident of the delegation of legislative and ministerial power to "representatives" as a matter of convenience. This grant of power to public servants does not, as some statesmen believe, establish public rulers whose right to rule can not be questioned. The grant of legislative power by the people to a State legislature in no wise prevents the people from exercising their inalienable and indefeasible right of direct legislation. The initiative and referendum is perfectly harmonious with the representative principle. In one case the people legislate through their agents; in the other case they legislate directly without agents.

It does not overthrow the representative system of government; it perfects the representative system of government. Those who favor the initiative and referendum do not intend to impair the representative system. They are determined on the contrary to perfect the representative system, which is and always has been a mixture of the exercise by the people of direct power, direct legislation, and of indirect legislation through representatives.

RECALL NO NOVELTY.

Even the right of recall is no novelty under the American system of government. Every one of the 13 Colonies—the State of New Hampshire, the State of Massachusetts Bay, the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, the State of New Jersey, the State of New York, the State of Connecticut, the State of Pennsylvania, the State of Delaware, the State of Maryland, the State of Virginia, the State of North Carolina, the State of South Carolina, the State of Georgia, on the 24th day of July, 1778, solemnly agreed to the Articles of Confederation of 1777, in Article V, to the right of recall, in which it was expressly agreed that the various States should appoint delegates to meet in Congress on the first Monday in November of every year—

With a power reserved to each State to recall its delegates, or any of them, at any time within the year, and to send others in their stead for the remainder of the year.

DEMOCRATIC CONSTITUTIONS EASILY AMENDABLE.

Our State governments, while establishing the representative principle as a matter of convenience, have nevertheless incorporated in every instance the declared principle that all power is vested in the people, and that they retain the right at any time to alter, amend, or abolish.

All democratic constitutions are flexible and easy to amend. This follows from the fact that in a government which the people really control the constitution is merely the means of securing the supremacy of public opinion and not an instrument for thwarting it. * * * A government is democratic just in proportion as it responds to the will of the people; since one way to defeat the will of the people is to make it difficult to alter the form of Government, it necessarily follows that any constitution which is democratic in spirit must yield readily to changes in public opinion. (Spirit of American Government: Smith.)

The fact is that with the initiative and referendum the people merely propose to amend the law establishing the legislatures so as to give to the people the option to exercise the right of direct legislation where they may find it expedient and proper to do so. All that is necessary is to enlarge the ordinary State constitution so as to provide for the people the method of directly legislating by passing an initiated bill or vetoing a referred bill. The legislature got its power to legislate from the people and the people violate no principle by exercising directly the legislative power they possess, and which is inalienable and indefeasible.

In amending the State constitution so as to reserve to the people the power to initiate and pass a bill by direct vote, or by the referendum to veto or affirm, as the case may be, an act passed by the legislature, the people merely exercise their sovereign power in a moderate and restricted way, which they have found necessary after a hundred years of experience with representatives in the legislature who have, particularly in this generation, too frequently failed to pass the laws the people want, and who have too frequently passed the laws which the people do not want.

It is absurd to say that this Republic was founded on the "representative principle." This Republic was not founded on the representative principle. It was founded on the sovereign right of the people to manage their own business (and not be managed by their servants), and it was for this reason that every State constitution declared this fundamental principle that all political power was inherent in the people, and that as sovereign they could at their pleasure alter, amend, or abolish even the constitutions themselves. This was the great foundation stone, and this is the principle now being asserted by the initiative and the referendum, to wit: The right of the people to rule. This is the very meaning of the word "democratic." Demos kratein means "the people have the right to rule." It is the origin of the word "democrat." A democrat is a man who believes in the right of the people to rule.

Aristocracy means the rule of the few, who consider themselves the best.

Autocracy means the rule of a single person.

Plutocracy means the rule of money.

Democracy means the rule of the people.

Delegating power to public servants was not new. It was a convenience and a mode of exercising popular sovereignty, not a means of destroying or of impairing it.

We established the system of delegating the legislative power to representatives in our State constitutions, who should meet in legislative assembly and debate and discuss and frame wise and virtuous laws drawn to promote the general welfare. When they are candidates they pledge their honor to the people to be guided by the general welfare. They go to the assembly and lift their hands to Almighty God and solemnly swear to be faithful to the people, and then special interests come and bring malign influences to bear upon the weakness of human nature that lead the legislator away from the paths of public virtue into passing laws against the general welfare, or in refusing to pass laws required by the general welfare. Representative government is a convenience for the people. No progressive wants to interfere with it or to change it where it is faithful and performs its proper duty; but when these representatives fail to pass laws of vital importance, when they pass laws doing a gross wrong to the public interest, the time has come when the people shall directly exercise so much of their legislative power as they may find it necessary to exercise at their option in passing the laws they do want and vetoing the laws they do not want.

THE ATHENS AND ROME ARGUMENT.

Oh, but say these opponents of popular government, remember the overthrow of the direct democracy of Athens and Rome.

It is difficult to argue with entire patience with men of learning and intelligence who will offer as a reason against popular government the so-called direct democracy of Athens and of Rome. We might as well go to Athens and to Rome to get our instruction in the management of modern railways and in handling the telegraph and telephone.

Only one person in 400 could read in Athens and in Rome. The people were divided into the very few intelligent and cultured and into the very, very many who were ignorant of letters and of the art of government, five-sixths of whom were slaves and the vast majority in hopeless poverty. They lacked the spirit of liberty, and the father controlled by law the son and his family as long as the father lived, with power of life and death and property.

It avails nothing to say that the populace of Athens had an appreciation of the beautiful forms of marble which their sculptors developed with great cleverness. The vital fact is that they had no knowledge of government; that they had no means of public communication except by word of mouth; no knowledge of liberty as we know it; and were actually ruled by an intellectual, financial, and military aristocracy under the forms of a direct democracy.

To-day the great body of our citizens can read and write. To-day we have millions of books available and libraries everywhere. To-day the most distant citizen can by the parcel post receive for a trifling expense the last word upon organized government and the art of government. To-day we have the telegraph and the telephone binding the ends of the world together and putting information with regard to government all over the world, its weakness and its strength, in the hands of every citizen who cares to know. To-day we have millions of men who do care to know, and who are interested in good government, and who are determined to have good government and to overthrow the rule of the self-seeking few and to terminate the commercial and financial piracy which has been dealing unjustly with the many for the benefit of the organized few. To-day we have modern newspapers, a miracle in art and in design, filled with news brought instantly by telegraph and telephone from the ends of the earth; filled with knowledge, literature, and art; filled with finance and commerce; filled with sport and humor and fun; filled with ten thousand times ten thousand wants and opportunities, which the poorest citizen can buy for one-hundredth part of his daily wage. Compare Athens and Rome of 2,000 years ago with Washington, Chicago, or New York!

Oh, no, Mr. President, the comparison can not be justly made; and that the opponents of popular government should go so far to find their argument against the rule of the people shows how poverty stricken and how poor and how mean are the fallacies and pretexts upon which they rely.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM JOKERS.

Mr. President, there are six dangerous jokers which I wish to call attention to and which the friends of popular government should beware of.

Joker 1. Limiting the initiative to statute laws and prohibiting the voters from proposing and adopting amendments to the State constitutions.

The constitutional initiative is the most vital part of any amendment. For in the State constitutions are many jokers restraining popular government that need correction by constitutional amendment.

Joker 2. To require an improbable or impossible majority necessary to enact or reject measures submitted to the voters.

Every measure voted on should be decided by the majority of the votes cast thereon.

Joker 3. To require large petitions to render it difficult to secure them, no matter what per cent is required.

This is done by increasing the percentages beyond reason or to require a certain per cent of the legal voters of certain counties.

The signature of any voter in the State should count regardless of residence.

Joker 4. To so frame the emergency clause that the legislature may annul the referendum whenever it chooses. The emergency should only be declared upon a two-thirds majority of all members on a recorded vote, setting forth the reasons for the emergency.

Joker 5. To put an arbitrary limit upon the number of measures which may be submitted to the people at any one election, because the special interests can thus preclude submission of public measures by offering trivial measures in advance of the public measure.

Joker 6. Failure to provide an adequate and efficient method of informing the voters concerning the measures submitted to them. The only safety for the political machine is to keep the people in ignorance. The Oregon publicity pamphlet informs the people. Insist on the publicity pamphlet.

I submit herewith a model constitutional amendment for the initiative and referendum, free from jokers, and self-executing:

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT FOR THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

The legislative authority of this State shall be vested in a legislative assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives, but the people reserve to themselves the power to propose legislative measures, resolutions, laws, and amendments to the constitution, and to enact or reject the same at the polls, independent of the legislative assembly, and also reserve power, at their own option, to approve or reject at the polls any act, item, section, or any part of any resolution, act, or measure passed by the legislative assembly.

The first power reserved by the people is the initiative, and not more than 8 per cent, nor in any case more than 50,000, of the legal voters shall be required to propose any measure by initiative petition, and every such petition shall include the full text of the measure so proposed. Initiative petitions, except for municipal and wholly local legislation, shall be filed with the secretary of state not less than four months before the election at which they are to be voted upon. If conflicting measures submitted to the people shall be approved by a majority of the votes severally cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall thereby become law as to all conflicting provisions. Proposed amendments to the constitution shall in all cases be submitted to the people for approval or rejection.

The initiative is also reserved as follows: If at any time, not less than 10 days prior to the convening of the general assembly, there shall be filed with the secretary of state an initiative petition for any measure signed by 1 per cent, nor in any case more than 5,000 legal voters, the secretary of state shall transmit certified copies thereof to the house of representatives and to the senate immediately upon organization. If said measure shall be enacted, either as petitioned for or in an amended form, it shall be subject to referendum petition as other measures. If it shall be enacted in an amended form, or if no action is taken thereon within four months from the convening of the general assembly, it shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the people at the next regular general election, provided such submission shall be demanded by supplementary initiative petition signed by 4 per cent, nor in any case more than 30,000, legal voters and filed not less than four months before such election. Such proposed measure shall be submitted either as introduced or with the amendments, or in any amended form which may have been proposed in the general assembly, as may be demanded in such supplemental petition. If such measure so submitted be approved by the electors, it shall be law and go into effect, and any amended form of such measure which may have been passed by the general assembly shall thereby stand repealed.

The second power is the referendum, and it may be ordered either by petition signed by the required percentage of the legal voters or by the legislative assembly as other bills are enacted. Not more than 5 per cent, nor in any case more than 30,000 legal voters, shall be required to sign and make a valid referendum petition. Only signatures of legal voters whose names are on the registration books and records shall be counted on initiative and on referendum petitions.

If it shall be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety that a measure shall become effective without delay, such necessity shall be stated in one section, and if, by separate vote of yeas and nays, three-fourths of all the members shall vote on a separate roll call in favor of the measure going into instant operation, because it is necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, or safety, such measure shall become operative upon being filed in the office of the secretary of state or city clerk as the case may be: Provided, That an emergency shall not be declared on any measure creating or abolishing any office or to change the salary, term, or duties of any officer or granting any franchise or act alienating any property of the State. If a referendum petition shall be filed against an emergency measure such measure shall become a law until it is voted upon by the people and if it is then rejected by a majority of those voting upon the question such measure shall be thereby repealed. No statute, ordinance, or resolution approved by vote of the people shall be amended or repealed by the legislative assembly or any city council except by three-fourths vote of all the members taken by yeas and nays. The provisions of this section apply to city councils.

The initiative and referendum powers of the people are hereby further reserved to the legal voters of each municipality and district as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in and for their respective municipalities and districts. Every extension, enlargement, purchase, grant, or conveyance of a franchise or of any rights, property, easement, lease, or occupation of or in any road, street, alley, or park, or any part thereof, or in any real property, or interest in any real property owned by a municipal corporation, whether the same be made by statute, ordinance, resolution, or otherwise, shall be subject to referendum by petition. In the case of laws chiefly of local interest, whether submitted by initiative or referendum petition or by the legislative assembly, shall be voted upon and approved or rejected only by the people of the locality chiefly interested, except when the legislative assembly shall order the measure submitted to the people of the State. Cities and towns may provide for the manner of exercising initiative and referendum powers as to their municipal legislation subject to the general laws of the State. Not more than 10 per cent of the legal voters may be required to order the referendum nor more than 15 per cent to propose any measure by the initiative in any city, town, or local subdivision of the State.

The filing of a referendum petition against one or more items, sections, or parts of any act, legislative measure, resolution, or ordinance shall not delay the remainder of the measure from becoming operative. Referendum petitions against measures passed by the legislative assembly shall be filed with the secretary of state not later than 90 days after the final adjournment of the session of the legislative assembly at which the measure on which the referendum is demanded was passed, except when the legislative assembly shall adjourn at any time temporarily for a period longer than 90 days, in which case such referendum petitions shall be filed not later than 90 days after such temporary adjournment. The veto power of the governor or the mayor shall not extend to measures initiated by or referred to the people. All elections on general, local, and special measures referred to the people of the State or of any locality shall be had at the regular general elections, occurring not less than four months after the petition is filed, except when the legislative assembly or the governor shall order a special election, but counties, cities, and towns may provide for special elections on local matters. Any measure initiated by the people, or referred to the people as herein provided, shall take effect and become law if it is approved by a majority of the votes cast thereon and not otherwise. Every such measure shall take effect 30 days after the election at which it is approved. The style of all bills shall be: "Be it enacted by the people of (name of State, municipality, or county)." This section shall not be construed to deprive any member of the legislative assembly or of a city council of the right to introduce any measure. The whole number of electors who voted for governor at the regular election last preceding the filing of any petition for the initiative or for the referendum shall be the basis on which the number of registered voters necessary to sign such petition shall be computed. Petitions and orders for the initiative and for the referendum shall be filed with the secretary of state or in municipal or local elections with the county or city clerk or such other officer as may be provided by law. In submitting the same to the people he and all other officers shall be guided by the general laws until additional legislation shall be especially provided therefor. This amendment shall be self-executing, but the legislature may enact laws facilitating its operation. All proposed measures submitted to the people shall be printed in pamphlet form, together with arguments for and against, as may be provided for by law, and mailed by the secretary of state to the electors at least 50 days before the election at which they are to be voted.

OBJECTIONS TO THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

Mr. President, what are the objections to the initiative and referendum?

First, it has been objected that it was contrary to the so-called "representative" principle of the Constitution. This objection I have abundantly answered. (Exhibit B.)

Second, that the people are not capable of direct legislation. The contrary has been abundantly shown by the experiences in all of the States and countries which have put it into effect.

Third, that representative democracy is better than direct democracy. The answer to this is that there is no such issue, since the optional initiative and referendum in nowise interferes with representative democracy.

Fourth, that the initiative and referendum would destroy deliberation, debate, and result in hasty legislation. The fact is an initiated bill is usually drawn by a group of patriotic citizens, who prepare the bill with infinite pains, consulting the best experts in the State, and only present it to the State after it has been thoroughly considered. It appears in the public prints; it is discussed by the citizens from one end of the State to the other; it is presented to each citizen of the State in a publicity pamphlet, giving the arguments for and against it, and a sufficient length of time before the election, that each citizen can thoroughly understand it; and then each citizen in the State, in the quiet and seclusion of the ballot box, expresses his opinion with regard to it, without excitement and without passion and with the utmost deliberation.

In Congress we pass volumes of bills. Is it incredible that the citizens who have the intelligence to select Senators and Presidents should also have the intelligence to pass one bill, or even two or three bills?

I have heard of hasty legislation by representatives, without much debate in legislatures, and sometimes in a conference committee important legislation has been put on a tariff bill by misrepresentatives at the instance of private interests and against the general welfare in great haste and without debate. Such hasty laws under a referendum could be vetoed by the people and ought to be vetoed.

THE PEOPLE WILL NOT VOTE FALLACY.

The crowning charge against the initiative and referendum by the former Senator from Texas is that only a small per cent of the people will vote, and his data is based on the cases of compulsory referendum. In Oklahoma the percentages have run from 54 to 100 per cent of the citizens voting. In Maine it has run from 50 to 100 per cent. In Missouri, from 71 per cent to 95 per cent; in Arkansas, from 75 per cent to 90 per cent; in Montana, from 72 per cent to 80 per cent; in Oregon it has run from 61 per cent up to 90 per cent; in South Dakota, from 57 per cent to 92 per cent.

Those who do not vote on these questions of public policy submitted by the initiative and referendum are those citizens who are ignorant or indifferent to such questions of public policy, and who voluntarily disfranchise themselves, leaving the more intelligent and more interested citizens to decide these questions. This voluntary disfranchisement of the unfit is of public benefit.

But, Mr. President, out of 187 yea-and-nay votes in the Senate previous to the retirement of the Senator he himself appears only to have voted 18 times, or less than 10 per cent. The people appear to be from 500 to 900 per cent better than this record, and are otherwise not justly subject to his criticism.

I submit an Exhibit A to my remarks upon this question giving in detail the percentages of votes in various States and the principles governing the initiative and referendum and ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. President, the restoration of popular government is absolutely essential to the welfare and happiness of the American people. The time has come when we must terminate the gross abuses of machine politics, when we must purify our governmental processes and establish the best form of government of which the American intelligence and conscience is capable. The people's rule system of government is not, or should not be, a partisan question. This issue of the people's rule goes to the root of all other questions because all modern questions practically comprise some form in which the rights, the interests, the health, and the happiness of the people is interfered with by the special interests seeking profit or promotion through the machine method of government. It is absolutely essential for the people to announce a new Declaration of Independence, freedom from the rule of the few, freedom from the rule of the special interests, freedom from the machine politicians who are in alliance with the special interests which have perverted the great Republic from its noblest ideals to sordid and selfish ends. In the words of the immortal Lincoln:

It is for us, the living, to highly resolve that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

THE REASONS IN BRIEF JUSTIFYING DIRECT LEGISLATION.

The reasons in brief which justify direct legislation have been perhaps best stated by Prof. Frank Parsons in 1900, since deceased. Prof. Parsons was a great publicist, with no ax to grind, no political ambition, and no other purpose than to serve God and mankind "in spirit and in truth."

Direct legislation—that is, direct legislation by the optional initiative and referendum.

1. Is essential to self-government.
2. Destroys the private monopoly of lawmakers.
3. Is a common-sense application of the established principles of agency.
4. Will perfect the representative system.
5. Is immediately and easily practicable.
6. Makes for political purity.
7. Kills the lobby.
8. Makes it useless to bribe legislators because they can not deliver the goods.
9. Attracts better men to political life.
10. Simplifies elections.
11. Simplifies the law.
12. Lessens the power of partisanship.
13. Elevates the press and the people.
14. Stops class legislation.
15. Opens the door of progress.
16. Is wisely conservative.
17. Works an automatic disfranchisement of the unfit.
18. Tends to stability.
19. Is a safety valve for discontent.
20. Is in line with the general trend of modern political history throughout the world.

I might add to these reasons—

21. Causes public servants to do their utmost to serve the public interest, knowing that the power of the people is over them directly.

22. It thus enthrones righteousness and the general welfare by giving sovereign power to the intelligence and conscience of the Nation.

23. It tends powerfully to educate the people on questions of public policy and increases the general intelligence.

24. It will enable the people to pass a thoroughgoing corrupt-practices act, a mandatory direct primary, and other progressive statutes necessary to establish the people's rule, which a machine-controlled legislature otherwise can and will prevent.

THE OBJECTIONS TO THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM

Are imaginary or based on erroneous information. Under the initiative and referendum only a few (not many, as objected) important laws would be referred to the people or initiated by the people.

The initiative and referendum is not hasty, without deliberation or by impulse, as objected, but the most deliberate of all legislative processes, usually taking about two years.

It is objected that from 20 to 40 per cent of the people do not vote on initiated measures. This only means that the ignorant or indifferent voter voluntarily disfranchises himself, leaving the questions of public policy to be decided by more intelligent and interested voters.

It is objected that the voters can not pass on complicated laws. The answer to this is that, complicated or not, the people well know the difference between honest and dishonest laws, between just and unjust laws, and when they have the power to kill the latter no more of them are apt to be made. Moreover, it is easier to pass upon a law in black and white, even if complicated, than to pass upon a complicated man and what he will do under the influence of the lobby.

It is objected that it is impracticable. This objection is based upon unadulterated ignorance.

It is objected we should "elect better men." We have tried this game long enough. It has failed. The system under which the "big stick" hangs over the "representative man" will make him better. It makes an unfaithful servant powerless, and this is the man we are after.

It is objected that direct legislation will destroy representative government. This is purely imaginary. It will perfect representative government and make the representative perform his duty or enable the people to correct his sins of omission or his sins of commission.

To accomplish integrity of government and perfect the system of popular government, we need—

First. An adequate registration system to register all entitled to vote, so that no person not entitled shall be registered, and open at all times to public examination.

Second. A secret ballot—Australian system—under which the financial and commercial bullies can not coerce or bribe the weak citizen whose bread and butter they control.

Third. A direct mandatory primary, by which the voters can select their candidates regardless of the political machine.

Fourth. A statute preventing corrupt practices, directly limiting the use of money, preventing bribery, coercion, and fraud, requiring publicity of campaign contributions, and giving the voter peace and absolute security from pressure on election day.

Fifth. A constitutional amendment for the initiative and referendum for every State, and statutes vitalizing the same so that the people can amend their State constitution when they like and can enact any laws they do want or veto any laws they do not want, in spite of the machine or the influence of political mercenaries.

Sixth. A statute providing publicity pamphlets, giving each citizen before election time full information and arguments for and against all public measures and for and against all public candidates.

Seventh. A statute providing for the recall, by which the people can nominate a successor to an incompetent, unfaithful, or obnoxious public servant.

Eighth. Local self-government for cities and towns by commission, with the initiative, referendum, and recall.

Ninth. The short ballot, with preferential provisions, by which the votes of unorganized citizens may be automatically cohered.

Tenth. The direct election of United States Senators.

Eleventh. The direct nomination of presidential candidates.

These are the chief agencies by which we shall restore the integrity and the efficiency of our Government, and of these agencies "the initiative and the referendum" are first, because they open the door to all the others.

Mr. President, in my judgment the Senate of the United States should throw the weight of its influence in favor of the initiative and referendum and not against it. I therefore offer a substitute for Senate resolution 413. Strike out all after the resolving clause in Senate resolution 413 and insert the following:

That the system of direct legislation, such as the optional initiative and referendum adopted by Oklahoma, Oregon, California, Washington, Arizona, Utah, Colorado, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Missouri, Arkansas, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Ohio, and Maine, is in harmony with and makes more effective the representative system and the principle of the sovereignty of the people upon which this Republic was founded, and is not in conflict with the republican form of government guaranteed by the Constitution.

I ask to have printed as Senate documents two exhibits, "A" and "B," to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FALL in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXHIBIT A.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM SIMPLIFIED.

It is possible that the words initiative and referendum may still sound strange and difficult to some. If so, we wish to make their meaning so plain right here in the beginning that they will hereafter be among the simplest and most familiar words in the vocabulary of every man, woman, and child above 12 years old.

THE REFERENDUM.

Let us begin with the referendum: It simply means a reference. When a question is referred to the people, that is a referendum. All constitutional amendments, except in the State of Delaware, are and always have been referred to a direct vote; that is, to the voters. That is a referendum which we have always had in the various States. So it is no new thing, and the word itself in this connection is already familiar to you. But we want to make the referendum apply to acts of the legislature whenever a reasonable number of voters demand it. This is the referendum that you are hearing about so much nowadays, and many of the States now have it and the rest of the States are in process of getting it. When questionable laws passed by the legislature can be referred to the voters, these laws can thus be stopped. And this is the purpose of the referendum: To stop bad laws. The purpose is to amend the State constitution to the effect that no laws passed by the legislature (except emergency measures, which shall be specially provided for) shall go into effect until 90 days after adjournment of the legislature. If, within said 90 days, the necessary number of voters petition for a referendum on any law, laws, or part or parts of a law passed by said legislature, then said law, laws, or part or parts of a law will be suspended until voted on by the voters at the next State election; and the fate of said measures is decided by the vote thereon at said State election. In this way bad laws may be vetoed by the voters, and the referendum is sometimes called the people's veto. It is entirely negative in its action. It is used to stop bad laws. But this is a very important thing, as politicians find it useless to make bad laws—laws unjust to the masses of the people—when the voters have it in their power to veto them.

"1. The principle or practice of referring measures passed upon by the legislative body to the body of voters, or electorate, for approval or rejection, as in the Swiss Cantons (except Freiburg) and in various local governments in the United States, and also in the local-option laws, etc.; also, the right to so approve or reject laws or the vote by which this is done. Referendum is distinguished from the mandate, or instruction of representatives by the people, from direct government by the people, in which they initiate and make the laws by direct action without representation, and from a plebiscite, or popular vote taken on any measure proposed by a person or body having the initiative but not constituting a representative or constituent body."

What is meant by the referendum as used in this book is a referendum at the demand of the voters, as distinguished from the reference of constitutional amendments to the voters by legislators, or from the French "plebiscite," which is a reference at the option of some governing authority. The voters of this country elect their legislators; that is, their agents or representatives. Then why should they not reserve to themselves the privilege of demanding a reference to themselves of any unsatisfactory acts of their agents? A business man has constant control of his agents. We are not free as long as we give our agents unlimited control of our affairs. The argument that "we elected them, and if they are not satisfactory they can be defeated and better ones chosen next time," is not satisfactory. During their term of office they can do—and many legislative bodies have done—incalculable damage and incur irretrievable loss, which could have been prevented by the referendum. The referendum is merely a method by which the people may control their agents.

REFERENDUM NOT USED ON ALL LAWS, BUT ONLY ON DEMAND.

Do not get the idea that it is proposed that every law must be referred to the voters. Many otherwise intelligent public men expose a strange lack of information by urging this as an objection to the referendum. The great mass of laws are fairly good and deserve to stand. The referendum applies only to laws upon which a referendum is legally demanded by the required number of petitioners within the specified time after adjournment of the legislative body. If the legislature faithfully and truly represents the electorate, no referendum will be demanded. The referendum is only a corrective to *mis*representation.

NOT OPPOSED TO REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT.

And do not get the idea that the referendum movement is a movement against representative government. It is not. We shall always need legislative bodies. But these bodies must realize that they are representative, and they must truly represent. These bodies will never have anything to fear from the referendum so long as they truly represent their constituents. And no representative body can reasonably complain of the ultimate control of public affairs being lodged with the people.

DOES NOT EXCLUDE EXPERTS.

It is sometimes urged against the referendum that it takes government out of the hands of experts. That is not true. Expert service is needed in the administrative departments of government, where the referendum does not apply. Everybody knows that the average legislator, councilman, or alderman is far from being an "expert in government." All we expect of him is honesty and good judgment, with reasonable efforts to prepare himself for his duties. He can, should, and does call expert service to his assistance when needed, and the tendency is to do this more and more. And sometimes a real expert becomes a member of a legislative body, and sometimes a faithful legislator is kept in office. The expert and expert service have been sadly neglected in legislation in the past. The possibility of a demand for reference to the voters of legislation of doubtful quality or character will stimulate legislators to make their work above question, and they can do this best by calling expert service to their aid.

INSURES JUST LAWS.

The establishment of just relations among the different individuals and classes of individuals is one of the chief objects of legislation. The referendum directly fosters this object, as a manifestly unjust law will be challenged and brought to the bar of judgment of the voters and defeated.

STOPS CORRUPT LAWS.

One of the chief arguments in favor of the referendum is that corrupt legislation may thus be defeated; and when corrupt politicians learn that they can not "deliver the goods" they will stop passing corrupt laws. This alone is sufficient reason to put the referendum into every State constitution.

BRINGS THE PEOPLE AND LEGISLATURES INTO PARTNERSHIP RELATIONS.

But perhaps the chief benefits of the referendum come from the fact that it establishes new relations between legislatures and the people whom they represent. The people become interested in and watchful of the acts of the legislature, which becomes worth while, because the referendum gives them power over these acts. Here is introduced among the people a new stimulus, a new interest in public affairs. The value to a community or State of this new spirit is beyond calculation. And the effect on legislative bodies is equally stimulating. They are spurred to their best work, and their responsiveness to the needs and wishes of the people is greatly increased.

LIKE THE GUN BEHIND THE DOOR.

This is a simple statement of what the referendum is. Remember, it is only a negative device. It is not constructive, excepting that the prevention of bad legislation encourages good legislation. Its chief value is in prevention, for it has been found that the menace of a referendum has prevented many a corrupt deal in States where the referendum exists. The presence of a policeman with his club is usually sufficient to maintain peace without actual use of the club. Woodrow Wilson cleverly compares the initiative and referendum to the gun behind the door. When it is known that the gun is there constantly ready for use its actual use is seldom required. It may be useful, though never used. Theodore Roosevelt would probably compare them to a powerful navy, the mere existence of which, with possibly an occasional display and demonstration, like sending our naval fleet around the world, is a strong influence for peace without firing a single gun. So the existence of the referendum in the constitution is a powerful influence for honest and high-class legislation. Thus the position of legislator will become one of greater usefulness and honor.

THE INITIATIVE.

If the word initiative sounds a little strange or difficult to you, it will not when you realize that it simply means to initiate or start something. The Standard Dictionary defines the "initiative" as follows:

"Initiative, n. 1. An introductory step or action; a first move; beginning; start; lead; as, an initiative toward good; he took the initiative. 2. The power of initiating; ability to originate or start; specifically, the right to propose legislative projects; as, in the United States the initiative in legislation for raising revenue belongs to the House of Representatives."

It works in this way: Suppose the legislature fails or refuses to pass a law that the people want. In the States which have the initiative a given number of voters can initiate or start the law desired and have it referred to a direct vote at the next State election, and if a majority of votes thereon are favorable, the measure becomes a law. That is plain and simple, isn't it? And it is just, and every State should have it, in order to start good laws.

THE STATUTORY AND CONSTITUTIONAL INITIATIVE.

There are two kinds of initiative—one for constitutional amendments and one for statutes or laws. The Constitution is often referred to as the fundamental law, while ordinary laws are called statutes or statute laws in distinction from the fundamental law or Constitution. The difference between them is that statutes have heretofore been made only by legislatures, while constitutions and constitutional amendments have always been given their authority, except in Delaware, by a direct vote of the people. Legislatures can change or repeal laws, but only the people, by direct vote of the voters, can change a constitution.

Thus you see the difference between the statutory initiative and the constitutional initiative. We have said above that the use of the initiative is to start good laws, or laws desired by the people when the legislature fails to supply them. In the same way with the constitutional initiative the voters can start good constitutional amendments when the legislature fails to start them. If the voters can adopt constitutions and consitutional amendments (and this they have always done, except in Delaware), they should certainly have the right to start constitutional amendments.

Both the constitutional and statutory initiatives are operated in the same way, a very simple way, as you will see later, and it is important that an initiative and referendum amendment shall simply specify that the initiative shall apply to both statutes and constitutional amendments. Some may ask here: "How about the constitutional referendum?" We have always had the constitutional referendum—that is, constitutional amendments have always been referred to the people, and this is an obligatory referendum; that is, legislatures are obliged to refer all constitutional amendments to the people. What we want is the statutory referendum—that is, the reference to the people of statutes passed by the legislature. But we do not want the obligatory form—that is, we do not want to refer all statutes to the people, but only such statutes as a certain number of voters may legally petition to a referendum.

With the initiative to start good laws and constitutional amendments, and the referendum to stop bad laws, the power of the people is greatly strengthened.

DIRECT LEGISLATION.

The initiative and referendum taken together are frequently called direct legislation, because they furnish the means for the people to legislate for themselves directly when the legislature does not properly represent them.

Direct action by the people has been in vogue since earliest times in this country in the town meetings of the New England towns, and public affairs are still managed in this way in many of these towns. At these meetings some one makes a motion. That is the initiative. Then the motion is referred to a vote of the meeting. That is the referendum. This is done in all sorts of meetings and governing bodies. The practice is well established everywhere. Doing the same thing on a large scale on paper does not change the process nor make it less desirable. We see that there is nothing new nor strange about the initiative and referendum. But we can no longer be confined to town meetings in the use of these direct powers. We have learned that these powers can be used conveniently and effectively in State-wide matters as well as in local matters; they are now in effective use in a number of the States, and the people of all the States are learning this fact and demanding the same privilege.

A FEW QUESTIONS ANSWERED.

Why should we have the initiative and referendum? Have we not self-government already in this great free country?

No; we have not self-government. Election day is our only free day. And on that day we are free only to choose our rulers for another "term." A man who has not control of his affairs is not a free man. If he yields complete control of his affairs to an agent for a term of years, he is not free during that time. No man of sound mind does this. Every sane employer retains control of his agents. But our communities, our States, and our Nation place absolute control of public affairs into the hands of elected officers for terms of years. Hence we are not a free people. We have not self-government. The essence of government is control; and when the people have not final control they are not free and they do not govern.

The choosing of rulers is not freedom. The selection of a governor is not governing. The choosing of a captain is not commanding. Only the control of public affairs is political freedom. The choosing of legislators is not making laws. And unless the people reserve to themselves the right to reject a law passed by legislators and to start desired laws and constitutional amendments which legislatures neglect or refuse to pass, we are in bondage to our elected so-called "representatives."

An apprentice may choose his master, to be bound to him for a term of years, but he is no more free under a self-chosen master than he would be under a master chosen for him. A people may elect their rulers and yet live under an absolute despotism. This was true in old Rome, and it is still true among certain tribes in Africa and Asia, who elect their chiefs, but who must implicitly obey the chiefs after election. Napoleon was elected to his imperial power.

How shall the people become really free and self-governing?

Simply by putting their will in control of public affairs, for sovereignty is determined by control. We do not wish to abolish legislatures. We simply wish to put the people's will in control, so that legislatures will be the servants of the people and not their masters.

How shall we do this?

By means of direct action when required—direct legislation by means of the initiative and referendum. And the process is very simple, as we shall see. We here are considering only legislative matters. When it comes to controlling executive officers the recall comes into play, which will be treated further on.

WHAT DIRECT LEGISLATION IS NOT.

And please do not confuse direct legislation by means of the initiative and referendum with anything else. It is sometimes called pure democracy, and it is almost that. But pure democracy involves the personal presence of the voter and his action on every measure, as in the New England town meetings and the Swiss Landsgemeinde, where the voters are congregated together and act on all measures. In the workings of the initiative and referendum, as we shall see, there is no congregating of the voters, and only a comparatively few measures are voted on directly by the voters. All the virtues of pure democracy are retained, without the inconvenience of massing the voters all in one place, and the advantage of special service by selected representatives is retained, but their power is controlled by the will of the people.

It is very different from the "ancient democracies of Greece and Rome," in which the masses were in slavery and in which legislative bodies were entirely absent.

It is not "destructive of representative government." All the virtues and advantages of special service by selected representatives are retained, only the representatives are under the control of the wishes of the people. This makes the representative system more truly representative.

It is not "mob rule." Mobs act by sudden impulse, and usually without order, and always illegally. The initiative and referendum act more slowly and deliberately than any other of our processes of government, and without excitement or disorder, and always in a legal manner at the ballot box, after full discussion and mature deliberation.

NOT AN ECONOMIC NOR A POLITICAL QUESTION.

Direct legislation, by means of the initiative and referendum, has not even the most distant relation to socialism, anarchy, single-tax, nor any other economic or political question. It is not an economic nor a political question at all. It is merely a process of making known the will of the voters. Its advocates are found in every party, and they hold the most varied and contradictory theories and beliefs regarding taxation, tariff, temperance, trusts, and all other economic and political questions. They unite only in the belief that the people should have a way to express and enforce their will in government. And this is a platform upon which all can and should unite.

In short, the initiative and referendum simply provide the means for doing what the majority of the voters want done.

SIMPLY THIS.

Its workings are so simple that a child can understand. Here is the whole matter in the fewest possible words: A legislature has been in session for several months and adjourns. If, within 90 days after adjournment, a referendum is demanded on one or more laws passed during said session, by the required number of petitioners, then said law or laws do not go into effect, but are suspended until voted on at the next State election, which is usually about a year and a half off. If a majority of votes on said law are negative, the law is vetoed by the voters; but if a majority of votes are affirmative, the law goes into effect. And if the legislature shall have neglected to sense the will of the people or refused to pass a measure evidently desired, the people may act for themselves by means of the initiative in this way: An individual, organization, or group has a bill drawn which it is thought will meet the popular wishes. If this bill is petitioned for by the required number of voters, and legally presented to the secretary of state four months before the next State election, he must publish the bill and place a descriptive title of it on the ballot, and if a majority of the votes thereon are favorable, the bill becomes a law; if not, it fails. This is a method of legislating independently of the legislature. The referendum is a method of revising the work of the legislature. And this is, briefly, the whole thing. Many of our States already have the initiative and referendum. Every State should have them. Can you imagine a man so "wrong" as to say the people should not have these primary rights?

WHY IT WAS NOT MADE A PART OF OUR EARLY CONSTITUTIONS.

And here some one may ask, Why did not the people of this free country always have these primary rights? Why did we not start out with them at the beginning of our government?

This is a proper question. Let us consider conditions then. Popular education did not exist then in any part of the world. The popular press had not arrived. Life was simple. Government was simple. Large cities, with their complex problems, did not exist. There were no electric lights nor gas nor coal oil nor even candles. Pine knots and tallow dips were the means of artificial lighting. The spring, rain barrel, and an occasional well were the only "water systems" known. There were no local public transportation systems, and stage coaches, and ox teams filled the place now occupied by the railroads. There were no corporations nor trusts; no great and powerful private interests to influence and bribe legislators, executives, and judges. In this simple life our public problems were few and simple, and public officers were not tempted away from the popular interests; hence all went well. But a century wrought great changes. With the large private interests came the corrupt use of money in politics. But also came popular education and the popular press. We learned that we did not have real self-government. Our methods suited the early times, but these methods could not cope with modern corruption and abuse of power. We saw that we must control our representatives and make them truly and faithfully representatives in order to have real self-government. The best means yet devised to achieve this are the initiative and referendum. These are, briefly, the reasons why these methods were not introduced, were not needed, in the early days of the Republic and why we do need them and must have them now.

Prof. Lewis J. Johnson, of Harvard University, writing of the early New Englanders, says:

"And it is clear that nothing was further from their minds than that the will of representatives should prevail over the will of the people, some modern officeholders to the contrary notwithstanding."

The New England town meeting presents a form of local government developed in the early days, which has survived until the present day, because it lodged the control of public affairs directly in the hands of the people.

"In a New England town any 10 voters can bring a question before the people for decision—a petition signed by 10 voters puts the matter in the warrant to be acted on at town meeting."—Parsons.

That is the initiative. Every town, city, and State should have it, the number of petitioners required increasing reasonably, according to the population of the city or State. The referendum occurs at the next annual town meeting, just as it occurs at the next election in cities and States which have the initiative and referendum.

OBJECTIONS ANSWERED.

The objections to the initiative and referendum are mostly imaginary or based on erroneous information or lack of information. For example:

ONLY A FEW LAWS ARE REFERRED.

1. Some otherwise intelligent men still think that the referendum means that every law will have to be referred to the people. Our legislative bodies turn out a frightful grist of laws every year, amounting to from 200 to 700 separate and distinct laws in each State, covering thousands of printed pages. Imagine all this being referred to the voters for a direct vote. The thought is preposterous, and it is ridiculous for legislatures to make so many and such voluminous laws, most of which are local, and should be left entirely to the localities affected, and many others are trivial and unnecessary. The referendum does not bring all laws to a direct vote, but only such laws as are legally brought to a referendum by a petition signed by a specified number of voters within 90 days after adjournment of the legislature. It is found in the referendum States that a very small percentage of the laws passed are brought to a referendum, but the fact that objectionable laws may be brought to a referendum is a strong deterrent to the passage of objectionable laws. This silent influence is, perhaps, the largest value of the referendum.

MOST DELIBERATE OF OUR GOVERNMENTAL PROCESSES.

2. Some of our prominent statesmen, whose minds are cast in last century's mold, say that the initiative and referendum are hasty in their action; beget action "in the passion of the hour"; "in sudden emotion," etc., and thereby "stir the passions of the mob," producing a condition of "mob rule," "mobocracy."

Nothing is further from the truth. Action by means of the initiative and referendum is many times slower and more deliberate than our century-old custom of electing candidates. For the latter we have rallies, torchlight processions, bands, barbecues, and all kinds of excitement. Not so with the initiative and referendum. Referendum measures are carried over from the adjournment of one legislature to the election of the next—usually nearly two years. Any "passion of the hour" about that? Initiated measures are frequently more deliberate than that, but they must be in the hands of the secretary of state four months before the election at which they are to be voted on, with the petitions and everything complete, to be then officially published to the voters, but they have usually received much publicity long before. Four months is about the time we usually give to our presidential campaigns, and our State and local campaigns are usually much shorter. So again, we see that we are on the side of deliberation instead of haste, and the furthest possible from "mob rule."

WEEDS OUT THE IGNORANT VOTER UNTIL HE BECOMES INTELLIGENT.

3. Some urge as an objection that many voters who take the time and trouble to vote for candidates, do not vote at all on measures. Yes, it is true that on an average of about 25 per cent of the voters who vote for candidates do not vote either for or against measures which are submitted at the same time. This is simply a process of self-disfranchisement to that extent, and it is very desirable, for it weeds out the ignorant and indifferent, and leaves such questions to be decided by the intelligent and interested citizens. Instead of an objection, this is one of the very valuable features of the action of the initiative and referendum. No fear of the ignorant negro vote nor of the ignorant foreign vote. These factors will count only when they develop sufficient interest and intelligence to vote on measures submitted.

DISCOURAGES COMPLICATED LAWS.

4. It is sometimes urged that the voters are "not fit" to vote on complicated laws. The answer is that laws should not be complicated. But we have always had to vote for complicated candidates, much to our disappointment. We now simply want control over these candidates to whom we must trust our affairs. Then they will not give us complicated laws. And, complicated or not, the people know the difference between honest and dishonest laws, between just and corrupt laws, and when they have the power to kill the latter, no more of them will be made.

THEORISTS SAID IT WAS IMPRACTICAL.

5. Scholars and theorists used to urge the objection that "it is a bunglesome and an entirely impractical method of making laws. It is only practical in a small locality like a New England town." But since some of our States have made such efficient use of this method for State-wide purposes in the last 10 years, these theoretical scholars are getting their eyes opened. They ought to have known better than to urge such an objection, in view of Switzerland's long experience with this method for both national and cantonal affairs; and our still longer experience with the referendum for State constitutional amendments. True, it might be a "bunglesome method" for all legislation, but nobody proposes such a thing. We will always keep our legislative bodies, and they will always do the bulk of our legislating. But with the initiative and referendum as a method of control, the legislative bodies will become better, more efficient in the art of lawmaking and more truly representative of their principals, the people. We must emphasize the fact that the people are the principals, and representatives are only agents; and the supreme authority and the control naturally belong to the principals. The initiative and referendum are the best means yet devised to accomplish this supremely important object.

"ELECT BETTER MEN" FALLACY.

6. Some "back number" people still urge that the remedy for legislative evils is to "elect better men." That has been urged and tried from time immemorial, and still the evils remain where the better plan (the initiative and referendum) has not been established. What would we think of an employer who had frequently been disappointed in his agents, who would constantly seek "better agents," failing to hold them responsible to him, instead of radically changing such a slip-shod system? The "better man" plan has long since been discredited. The better system plan always brings the better man, or makes the unfaithful servant powerless to do harm.

DOES NOT DESTROY REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT.

7. After reading all the above, some stupid people will still say: "And are we to close our legislative halls and destroy representative government?" No, dear blockhead, let us assure you for the millionth time that the legislatures are not to be dismissed. Nobody proposes such a thing; nobody but yourself has ever mentioned such a ridiculous proposition. A legislative body, whose acts are beyond control, is not a representative body; it is a body with absolute power and represents nothing but itself. Only a legislative body whose acts may be revised by the people can be representative of the people. An agent, when given absolute power is no longer an agent. He then becomes the principal. Our effort is to make our legislative bodies truly representative. We wish to make assurance doubly sure on this point, so it will never bother you again. Do not be misled by distinguished men, enemies of the people's rule, who still say (either in ignorance or dishonesty), "the initiative and referendum will destroy representative government." It is ridiculous and untrue. No one wishes to destroy representative government. It is one of the great developments in government, and we wish to and will cling to it. But when legislative bodies are absolute in their power, they are not representative. They are then autocratic. We wish to make them really representative, and thus improve them and enlarge their usefulness.

POSITIVE TESTIMONY.

Let us close this section by testimony of a positive nature, and the best which we know for the brief space occupied is the following, written by Prof. Frank Parsons in 1900 (since deceased). These 20 brief positive statements scintillate like diamonds. He used the expression "direct legislation" more frequently than the "initiative and referendum." They mean the same thing, as "direct legislation" is accomplishd by means of the "initiative and referendum." His words 12 years ago were as follows:

Direct legislation—

1. Is essential to self-government.
2. Destroys the private monopoly of lawmakers.
3. Is a common-sense application of the established principles of agency.
4. Will perfect the representative system.
5. Is immediately and easily practicable.
6. Makes for political purity.
7. Kills the lobby.
8. Makes it useless to bribe legislators because they can not deliver the goods.
9. Attracts better men to political life.
10. Simplifies elections.
11. Simplifies the law.
12. Lessens the power of partisanship.
13. Elevates the press and the people.
14. Stops class legislation.
15. Opens the door of progress.
16. Is wisely conservative.
17. Works an automatic disfranchisement of the unfit.
18. Tends to stability.
19. Is a safety valve for discontent, and
20. Is in line with the general trend of modern political history throughout the world.

HISTORY.

We have intimated that the so-called "democracies" of ancient Greece and Rome were not democracies at all, being much nearer aristocracies than democracies, as the government was by the upper few, the masses being in slavery. There is also this radical difference: We employ legislative bodies to do the great body of legislating and use the initiative and referendum only as an adjunct and a method of control. The ancient democracies had no legislative bodies. Yet some of our eminent "scholars," notably President Schurman, of Cornell University, constantly (and ignorantly) use "the failure of the ancient democracies" as an argument against the modern initiative and referendum.

We have noted the New England town meetings as among the earliest examples of direct government, and they still persist. But they are examples of pure democracy, involving the bodily presence of each voter at meetings where all the public questions are decided by direct vote. For strictly local government of small communities this plan has proven its value, but it can not be applied to large cities and States.

We have noted that the referendum has been used in adopting the constitutions of all our States and all amendments to the same, except in the State of Delaware. It has always been the custom to refer constitutions to the people for adoption or rejection, and this custom has always been strictly followed except in Delaware. The submission of constitutional amendments to a direct vote is the obligatory referendum, as State constitutions, with the above exception, say that amendments must be submitted to the people for acceptance or rejection. What we are working for now is the optional referendum of laws—that is, a constitutional provision that laws passed by legislatures may be submitted to a direct vote at the option of the voters—that is, upon legal demand by a legal number of voters. The people of a number of our States have in recent years gained this privilege (details in following pages), and we are working for this privilege in all States.

It should also be noted in this connection that the referenda on the location of State capitals, county seats, and various State and county buildings and institutions, boundaries, limitation of State and local indebtedness, appropriations, loans, improvement bonds, city charters, extension of the rights of suffrage, various questions concerning the liquor traffic, etc., have been innumerable from early times to the present.

It is strange and astonishing that politicians, publicists, and professors of political science should denounce the referendum as a "dangerous experiment" or a "foreign innovation" in a Nation where the principle has been so long and so widely exercised as in the United States.

The above is a brief review of the people's direct control of public affairs in this country. Switzerland deserves consideration here, as follows:

SWITZERLAND.

Although the American people were the first to employ the referendum on State constitutions, the Swiss were the first to extend the principle to statutes and to establish the initiative. The period from 1831 to 1891 marked the rapid evolution of the modern system, and the results obtained have led Ambassador James Bryce to declare: "Switzerland is the most successful democracy the world has ever seen."

It was the splendid effects of this new system that attracted the attention of American reformers, looking for a "way out" of the wilderness of political corruption, and led to the adoption and extension of this system in the United States.

The following liberal quotation from Prof. Frank Parsons (in The City for the People) throws a clear light upon Swiss experience:

"Fifty years ago Switzerland was more under the heels of class rule than we are to-day; political turmoil, rioting, civil war, monopoly, aristocracy, and oppression—that was the history of a large portion of the Swiss until within a few decades. To-day the country is the freest and most peaceful in the world. What has wrought the change? Simply union and the referendum—union for strength, the referendum for justice; union to stop war and riot; the referendum to overcome monopoly, aristocracy, and oppression. A solid confederation of the 22 Cantons or States, with a good constitution, was founded in 1848. Peace followed, but the railroads, politicians, aristocrats, and monopolists continued to plunder the people. In 1858 a heavy subsidy was granted a railroad by the legislature of Neuchatel. This opened the eyes of the Switzers to the 'beauties' of the representative system. They began to cast about for a remedy. Some of the ablest citizens had for years been calling attention to the value of the referendum (which was practiced in a few of the small forest cantons), urging the extension of the method to other States and to the Union. The people saw that it was of no use to put faith in parties struggling for public office or to continue trying to guess which candidates might withstand the corruptions of power, and so they decided to trust themselves. In 1863 and a few years following six of the leading cantons adopted the initiative and referendum, and to-day direct legislation is practiced in all of Switzerland's cities, most of its communes, in 21 out of the 22 cantons, and in the Federal Government. The confederation adopted the referendum in 1874. The initiative is in use in 17 cantons, and the federation adopted it in 1891. The referendum clause of the Federal constitution reads as follows:

"'Federal laws as well as Federal resolutions which are binding upon all, and which are not of such a nature that they must be dispatched immediately, shall be laid before the people for acceptance or rejection when this is demanded by 30,000 Swiss voters or by eight cantons.'

"The amendment of 1891 provides for the initiative 'when 50,000 voters demand the enactment, abolition, or alteration of special articles of the constitution.' As constitutional lines are very loosely drawn in Switzerland, the people will be able to initiate almost any measure they choose. Let us look at the results. Mr. W. D. McCrackan and Mr. J. W. Sullivan have made exhaustive studies of Swiss affairs, and to them I owe most of the facts I give about the referendum there. Mr. Sullivan has the story of direct legislation in writing from Herr Carl Burkli, of Zurich, known as the 'father of the referendum,' who says: 'The masses of the citizens of Switzerland found it necessary to revolt against their plutocracy and the corrupt politicians who were exploiting the country through the representative system. * * * The plutocratic Government and the grand council of Zurich, which had connived with the private banks and railroads, were pulled down in one great voting swoop. The people had grown tired of being beheaded by the officeholders after every election. And politicians and privileged classes have ever since been going down before these instruments in the hands of the people.'

"The referendum has been carried most nearly to perfection in Berne, the great canton of half a million people, and in Zurich, with its 340,000 inhabitants. The legislature of Zurich consists of a single house of 300 members. It meets two or three times a year for a two-weeks' session. It can not grant a privilege to a corporation nor create an office nor grant a contract. Every enactment and every appropriation above the ordinary limited sums for purposes specified in the constitution must go to the polls. And the consequences—let me quote Mr. Sullivan verbatim, so that there may be no mistake: 'The Zurich legislature knows nothing of bribery. It never sees a lobbyist. There are no vestiges remaining of the public extravagance, the confusion of laws, the partisan feeling, the personal campaigns characteristic of representative governments. * * * When men of Zurich, now but middle aged, were young, its legislature practiced vices similar to those of American legislatures; the cantons supported many idling functionaries; and the citizens were ordinarily but voting machines, registering the will of the political bosses. * * * To-day there is not a sinecure public office in Zurich; the popular vote has cut down the number of officials to the minimum and their pay also. * * * There are no officials with high salaries. * * * There is no one-man power in Switzerland. * * * No machine politician lives by spoils. * * * The referendum has proved destructive to class law and class privilege.' In other wards, Switzerland has rid the body politic of its vermin—it has taken politics out of the slums and civilized it. Direct legislation has destroyed the power of legislators to legislate for personal ends, and so has punctured the heart of evil in legislation.

"One of the most valuable results has been the effect on the press. The papers no longer deal in spite, prejudice, sensationalism, and slander, but aim at quiet discussion and solid argument. Says Mr. Sullivan: 'The advance of the Swiss press in power, in dignity, in public helpfulness since the day of direct legislation in that country has been one of the most remarkable facts connected with the reform. I wonder if it really could give our papers dignity and helpfulness and a slight respect for the truth. Mighty magician, we pray for thy speedy arrival.

"One of the leading friends of the referendum wrote to Mr. Sullivan that it was 'deeply rooted in the hearts of the whole people. All parties who formerly opposed the referendum, even the most reactionary and aristocratic, have declared officially their adherence to the initiative and referendum as a thoroughly good institution.' No one objects to it now but a few individuals who stood in the path of progress and got hurt by the wheels of justice, and who comfort themselves with ungracious talk."

By means of the initiative and referendum the Swiss people have achieved notable political and economic results, and recently they have "conserved" the water power of the nation by use of the initiative. By an overwhelming vote they decided to place the Federal Government in supreme control, and prevent further exploitation by private companies. Likewise by an overwhelming vote they forbade the manufacture or sale of absinthe in Switzerland.

So profound has been the influence of the mere presence of the initiative and referendum upon legislative bodies that they have been used but sparingly. From 1875 to 1908 the referendum was invoked upon only 30 Federal laws. Of these 11 were adopted and 19 rejected by the voters. During this period the Federal initiative was invoked but nine times. Four of the proposed amendments were adopted and five rejected.

In cantonal affairs the use made of the initiative has been equally unnecessary. As an example, the Canton of Berne has invoked the initiative only eight times in 40 years. In this Canton the referendum is obligatory—that is, all laws are referred to the people. But in Cantons where the referendum is petitional, or optional with the people, it has not been extensively employed for the reason that there has been but little necessity for it.

In Canton Basel, where the optional initiative and referendum are in operation, the initiative has been invoked only twelve times. Eight of the measures were adopted and four rejected. In this period the referendum has been invoked on only 24 measures passed by the legislature, of which 13 were adopted and 11 rejected.

Another result of direct legislation in Switzerland of tremendous value is that only a small number of laws are passed by the legislative assemblies, cantonal and national. In common with the American people the Swiss detest a "flood of laws," and the legislators know that the people would promptly use the referendum unsparingly on a multiplicity of unnecessary statutes. It is unusual for a cantonal assembly to enact more than five or six laws at a session. But it is in national matters that the tendency is of most value as a lesson to the American people.

In the 34 years from 1874 to 1908 the Swiss Federal Congress enacted only 260 laws. And it is perhaps needless to say that these laws had to do with important matters in the interests of the common welfare of the Swiss people; further, that they had most careful scrutiny in preparation. And why not? The legislators had time to consider them. It is not to the honor of a Swiss representative to attempt to clutter up the statute books with unimportant laws which bear his name.

Compare this with the American practice: In the Ohio Legislature of 1909 there were introduced 1,008 bills—a fair average for that State. Usually from 200 to 400 of these bills become laws. In New York sometimes as many as 2,000 laws are passed by the legislature in one year.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

Those who desire a working knowledge of direct legislation will find the following list of books and other publications useful. It is by no means exhaustive. Some of the works are listed for their historic interest and value. But the main idea is to note those which are timely, available, and well worth while.

Unless otherwise quoted, the price is net (without postage), in cloth binding.

BOOKS.

THE SWISS CONFEDERATION.

(By Sir Francis Adams and C. D. Cunningham. Macmillan & Co., New York. 280 pp. $1.75. 1889.)

A sympathetic review of Swiss history and the development of Swiss democracy, with especial reference to the referendum. One of the first accounts of the Swiss experience, and one which had great influence in England and America among the thinking classes. Widely quoted.

DIRECT LEGISLATION BY THE CITIZENSHIP.

(By J. W. Sullivan. 120 pp. 1892. Now out of print.)

This virile little book, published first by the Twentieth Century Publishing Co., New York, and afterwards by J. A. Wayland, Girard, Kans., and others, ran through many editions and was circulated throughout the United States by the tens of thousands. It gave a popular account of the Swiss experience and advocated the adoption of direct legislation in this country. It is safe to say that no other direct-legislation book ever published has had such a tremendous influence upon the masses of the people or has done so much to secure the initiative and referendum in the United States.

THE RISE OF THE SWISS REPUBLIC.

(By W. D. McCracken. Henry Holt & Co., New York. 1892. 413 pp. $2.)

The best general history of Switzerland yet written by a non-Swiss. The viewpoint throughout is democratic.

THE REFERENDUM IN SWITZERLAND.

(By Simon Deploige. Translated by C. P. Trevelyan. Longmans, Green & Co., London and New York. 334 pp. 1892 and 1898. $1.50.)

Assumes the historical point of view, but is prejudiced against the initiative and referendum. Written by a Belgian lawyer to help defeat the adoption of direct legislation in Belgium. It has been widely quoted by reactionaries, since it was long the only work in England devoted exclusively to the Swiss experience.

THE REFERENDUM IN AMERICA.

(By Ellis P. Oberholtzer. Charles Scribners' Sons, publishers, New York. 533 pp. 1900 and 1912. $2.)

An exhaustive history of the American practice of referring constitutions, constitutional amendments, and certain State and local questions to a popular vote. The purpose is to show that the principle of the referendum is not a foreign importation. The first edition, 1900, was conservative, though fair and without bias. The edition of 1912 contains supplementary chapters dealing with the history of the initiative and referendum from 1900 to 1911, which are written in a spirit of bitter hostility and are far below the tone of the main body of the work.

GOVERNMENTS AND PARTIES IN CONTINENTAL EUROPE.

(By Prof. A. Lawrence Lowell, now president of Harvard University. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston. 2 vols. 832 pp. 1896. $5.)

The chapter dealing with Switzerland is a strong adverse criticism of direct legislation. He opposes its adoption in the United States.

GOVERNMENT IN SWITZERLAND.

(By J. M. Vincent. The Macmillan Co., New York. 370 pp. 1900. $1.25.)

A reliable account of the Swiss system of government, with especial attention paid to direct legislation. Good.

THE CITY FOR THE PEOPLE.

(By Prof. Frank Parsons. Published by Dr. C. F. Taylor, 1520 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia. Revised edition 1901. 704 pp. Cloth, $1; paper, 50 cents. Unfortunately just out of print.)

Pages 235 to 386 present an exhaustive and most able argument in favor of the initiative and referendum. The case for direct legislation has never been better stated, and the fundamental arguments are standard.

A SOVEREIGN PEOPLE.

(By Henry Demarest Lloyd. Doubleday, Page & Co., New York. 273 pp. 1907. $1.50.)

The best account in English of the Swiss experience with direct democracy. The book is edited by the English economist, John A. Hobson, from notes and manuscript left by Mr. Lloyd at his death.

THE PEOPLE'S LAW.

(By Judge C. S. Lobinger. The Macmillan Co., New York. 429 pp. 1909. $2.50.)

The contents of this valuable work is best described in the subtitle "Popular participation in lawmaking from ancient folkmoot to modern referendum. A study in the evolution of democracy and direct legislation." A voluminous, careful, and scholarly work of great value to the student.

DOCUMENTS ON THE STATE-WIDE INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

(By Prof. Charles A. Beard and Birl E. Shultz, of Columbia University. The Macmillan Co., New York. 394 pages. 1912. $2.)

A most useful volume containing all the amendments adopted in the American States, or pending adoption at the election of 1912, together with the enabling acts passed in the different States. The introduction by Prof. Beard is an able statement of the relation of direct legislation to the representative system of government and the political conditions which have caused the adoption of the initiative and referendum. The viewpoint is critical but friendly.

THE INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

(Edited by William Bennett Munro. D. Appleton & Co., New York. 365 pages. 1912. $1.50.)

One of the National Municipal League series. Consists of some 14 essays and speeches both for and against direct legislation. Col. Roosevelt, Gov. Wilson, President Lowell, of Harvard, Prof. Lewis J. Johnson, of Harvard, and others are included. An attempt is made to present every side of the question. On the whole conservative.

GOVERNMENT BY ALL THE PEOPLE.

(By Delos F. Wilcox, Ph. D. The Macmillan Co., New York. 324 pages. 1912. $1.50.)

A lucid discussion of the arguments for and against the "initiative, referendum, and recall as instruments of democracy." The text deals with the fundamental principles involved and little attention is paid to either the history or the "results" of direct legislation. Favorable to the democratic theory of government. A readable and inspiring book.

THE REFERENDUM AMONG THE ENGLISH.

(By Samuel Robertson Honey. The Macmillan Co., London and New York. 114 pages. 1912. 2 shillings 6 pence (62 cents).)

Shows that the referendum in America, used from the earliest times, originated among the English colonists and is an outgrowth of old English ideals and practices in government.

THE OREGON SYSTEM.

(By Allen H. Eaton. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago. 195 pages. 1912. $1.)

Professes to be an unprejudiced account of the use made of the initiative and referendum by the people of Oregon. The author is a member of the Oregon Legislature and affiliates with the old stand-pat politicians. Hence the book has a decided bias against an effective direct legislation system, and the recommendations made to "safeguard" the Oregon system would render it practically useless.

THE INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM, AND RECALL.

(Edited by Clyde L. King, Ph. D. Being the September, 1912, issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. 332 pages. $1. Address American Academy of Political and Social Science, West Philadelphia Post Office Station, Philadelphia, Pa.)

A valuable collection of 18 papers on the subject contributed by well-known college professors and public men. All shades of opinion represented. Covers the theory, history, and use made of the initiative and referendum both in America and Switzerland.

PAMPHLETS.

The pamphlet literature of direct legislation is too extensive to attempt any adequate listing here. In the past 20 years hundreds of pamphlets have been issued by the various State leagues and by private individuals. Among those which can now be easily secured and which will be found of value we note the following:

THE CODE OF THE PEOPLE'S RULE.

(By United States Senator ROBERT L. OWEN. S. Doc. No. 603. 168 pages. 1910. Free. Write Senator OWEN, Washington, D. C.)

Contains copies of the best laws enacted up to that time for all the "people's power" measures, including the initiative, referendum, and recall, direct primaries, short ballot, corrupt-practices act, etc. Several other Senate documents relative to direct legislation can also be secured from Senator OWEN.

POPULAR V. DELEGATED GOVERNMENT.

(By United States Senator JONATHAN BOURNE. S. Doc. No. —.)

Speech of Senator BOURNE defending the initiative and referendum in the light of Oregon's experience. Free. Address Senator BOURNE, at Washington, D. C.

A GLARING ERROR IN CERTAIN SENATE DOCUMENTS OPPOSING POPULAR GOVERNMENT.

(S. Doc. No. 651. Memorial by Dr. C. F. Taylor.)

Refutes claims made by various United States Senators that under the initiative and referendum laws would be enacted "in haste" and "without deliberation." Free. Write Dr. Taylor, 1520 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

NEW DANGERS TO MAJORITY RULE.

(S. Doc. No. 897. By Mr. Judson King.)

Compares the "checks and balances" of the United States Constitution with the "safeguards and restrictions" which conservatives propose for the initiative and referendum. Will be sent free upon request sent to Equity office.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM, AN EFFECTIVE ALLY OF REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT.

(By Prof. Lewis Jerome Johnson, of Harvard University.)

An effective pamphlet of 30 pages good for propaganda purposes. Issued by the Massachusetts Direct Legislation League, 60 State Street, Boston. Five cents per copy. Special price in quantities.

THE WORKABLE AMENDMENT.

In practice the success of the initiative and referendum almost wholly depends upon the detailed provisions of the amendments through which these powers may be exercised by the people. If they are honestly drawn, good results will follow their use. If the amendments are filled with "jokers," the results will be disappointing. Oregon has succeeded because Oregon has a good system. Utah, Montana, and other States have failed because they have poor systems. Thus far in every State the good results achieved have been in direct ratio to the character of the system of direct legislation established.

There are two main factors in a direct-legislation system:

The constitutional amendment.

The enabling or elaborating law.

The amendment defines the legislative powers reserved by the people, and specifies the main elements in the process by which these powers shall be exercised through the initiative and referendum, such as the size of the petitions required, the majorities by which measures shall be enacted, the duties of the State officials in respect to petitions and elections, and the general course which a measure shall take from its inception to the decision of the voters at the polls concerning it.

The enabling act is a matter of statute law facilitating the process of direct legislation provided in the amendment. It contains many minor regulations which can not well go into the constitution, such as the legal forms under which petitions shall be circulated and filed, penalties for fraudulent signatures, the form of the ballot, the details of the method of publishing proposed measures, etc.

Since many of the measures which are brought to the bar of public opinion are of great moment and are bitterly contested by the privileged interests, the greatest care should be exercised in the preparation of both the amendment and the enabling act. The channel should be kept clear for an honest, free expression of the public will upon any question. Any defect will be promptly taken advantage of by the shrewd lawyers employed by those who seek to forestall a popular vote, and hence the initiative and referendum process should be made "hole proof" from first to last.

The recommendations herewith offered are drawn from the actual experience of the people of the various States in which direct legislation has been in operation. They are not theoretical, but practical, and if followed will provide a system which will be of real value to the people and at the same time guard the voters against having the ballot overloaded by the proposals of cranks and extremists.

ESSENTIALS OF AN EFFICIENT INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM SYSTEM.

The amendment.

I. GENERAL.

(a) The amendment should expressly reserve legislative power to be exercised by the people under the conditions set forth in the amendment, just as legislative power is expressly granted to the legislature in the constitution.

(b) Only such public officials as can be forced to do their duty through mandamus proceedings should have controlling charge of measures from the filing of the petition until the date the measure takes effect or is rejected.

(c) The courts should be prohibited from declaring laws enacted by the people "unconstitutional."

(d) The amendment should be made self-executing.

II. THE INITIATIVE.

(a) Should apply to constitutional amendments as well as to statute laws.

Little progress can be made by the people in solving the political and economic problems of this time if they are unable to change their fundamental law when necessary. The predatory interests have little fear of the statutory initiative or referendum. Constitutional provisions and the interpretation thereof are their real concern. Controlling these they rule all.

(b) Should be direct as well as indirect.

By the direct method the initiative petition must be filed with the secretary of state, say four months before the election at which the proposed measure is to be voted upon, and is submitted by him directly to the voters.

By the indirect method the initiative petition must be filed with the secretary of state, say 10 days before the legislature meets, and is by him presented to that body. If not enacted without change or amendment, the proposed measure is submitted by the secretary of state to the voters at the ensuing general election, which usually occurs from 18 to 20 months after the adjournment of the legislature.

The vital point is the time involved. Allowing three months for securing the petition in all cases, it is evident that by the direct method the decision of the voters upon any question can be secured seven months after the inception of the petition. Four months of this time is given to discussion by the voters, which is ample time for careful consideration. By the indirect method the process requires over two years from the time the petition is begun until the vote is taken, assuming as we must, that the legislature refuses to enact the measure proposed, and assuming biennial elections. Two years is too long, both because it does not give the voters opportunity to act in emergencies where a long delay might involve serious loss to the State, and because the public interest in a measure may diminish with so long a wait.

The California amendment providing for the indirect initiative on a 5 per cent petition and the direct initiative on an 8 per cent petition is a happy solution of the question. The majority of the proposed measures will naturally gravitate to the legislature through the indirect method because of the smaller cost of the petition required, and the direct method may be used to save time whenever desired. It is unfortunate, however, that the California amendment does not include the indirect initiative to constitutional amendments.

(c) The time for securing initiative petitions should not be limited.

The arbitrary law passed by the Oklahoma Legislature, allowing the voters only 90 days in which to secure and file a petition after its inception is practically prohibitive to all save those who can command plenty of money or have a powerful organization to depend upon. No such restrictions should be inserted in an amendment.

(d) The legislature should have no power to alter a measure in any way or delay its submission.

(e) No arbitrary limit should be set upon the number of questions which can be submitted. That is the people's business.

III. THE REFERENDUM.

(a) Laws passed by the legislature should not go into operation for 90 days from the adjournment of the session, to give opportunity for referendum petitions.

(b) It should be specifically provided that laws against which a petition is filed stand suspended until the vote upon them is taken.

"It is objected that a good law may be delayed from going into operation by this provision. Possibly on rare occasions, but it should be remembered that the direct-legislation system tremendously facilitates progressive legislation, which vastly overbalances an occasional delay. Also, the objectors forget the danger of allowing bad laws to remain effective until repealed, especially those affecting franchises, the sale or purchase of public property," etc.

IV. THE EMERGENCY CLAUSE.

(a) Should require that all emergency laws be passed by at least a two-thirds vote of the legislature, and carry a separate section setting forth the nature of the emergency.

(b) Should be liberal in scope, but specifically prohibit the emergency from being applied to franchise rights, the sale of public properties, etc.

"It is often desirable to allow a law affecting some minor matter to go into effect at once when the public rights are not endangered, but may be conserved. Too strict an emergency clause prevents relief in these cases and is undesirable. The two-thirds majority, the governor's approval, the specific exemptions, and the right of the people to invoke the referendum and repeal the law are sufficient safeguards."

(c) Should not "except" emergency laws from the referendum.

No law should be exempt from an ultimate popular vote if the people desire it. The "joker" in most emergency clauses now in force is that they permit the legislature to deny the people the right to vote upon anything a bare majority or a two-thirds majority of the legislature see fit to declare "immediately necessary for the preservation of the public peace, health, or safety."

V. THE PETITION.

(a) For an initiative petition the number of signatures required should be sufficient to indicate a desire on the part of the voters that the question shall be submitted to the electorate, but not so many as to be an unnecessary burden upon those who wish the measure submitted. Opinions may differ as to the proper number. It should be large enough to prevent cranks from overloading the ballot, but not so large as to overburden honest citizens in an honest effort, nor so large as to defeat such efforts. In the legislature a single member may initiate a measure before that body, then would not a number of voters equal to one member's entire constituency be sufficient to initiate a measure before the people of the State?

Let us try it from another angle. A nominating petition of 1,000 voters will place upon the ballot a candidate for governor or other State officer in Oregon, Oklahoma, Nebraska, or Illinois. (See direct-primary laws of these States.) Should it be any more difficult to place an initiatory measure upon the ballot than the name of a candidate? Mr. Holdback, who is afraid of the people, will say "yes," and the politicians, who are more interested in candidates than in laws will agree with him.) Perhaps we will have to yield something to the "Holdbacks" and the politicians, but we must not allow them to make it so much more more difficult as to render the initiative practically unworkable.

And here we must look out for "jokers." A favorite "joker" urged by the "holdbacks" is to require that initiative and referendum petitions be required from a certain number of counties or congressional districts in the State. Any such required distribution has proven to be a great hardship, and should be avoided. A voter's signature should count, in whatever part of the State he may live.

(b) A required petition for the referendum should be much smaller than for the initiative. The chief reason is the time limit (90 days) within which the petition must be completed. It is usual to require only from one-half to two-thirds the number of names required for an initiative petition for a referendum petition.

An unfortunate custom has been started of specifying percentages of the total vote to determine the size of initiative and referendum petitions. Maine broke away from that custom and requires definite numbers (10,000 for the referendum and 12,000 for the initiative). The definite-number plan is much better than the percentage plan, for many reasons, and will doubtless be used hereafter; but the Maine numbers are large for the small and scattered population of that State. In connection with the model amendment printed in this issue, definite numbers are suggested for initiative and referendum petitions in all States which have not yet submitted an amendment.

VI. THE MAJORITY.

(a) All measures submitted to the people should be adopted or rejected by a majority of the votes cast thereon and not otherwise.

To require a majority of all the votes cast for candidates "in the election" is to put a premium on ignorance and carelessness and increase the political power of those who care little or nothing for good government. It is now conceded by the men who framed the Oklahoma constitution that the insertion of this "joker" (though done without knowledge of its fatal character) has practically destroyed the value of the initiative. With the establishment of the publicity pamphlet, as used in Oregon, sent to each voter in the mails, the voters have opportunity to educate themselves, a large vote is insured, and there is no danger of so-called "minority rule."

VII. WHEN IN FORCE.

Measures adopted by the people should go into effect automatically at the expiration of a given number of days after election, or upon the governor's proclamation, which should be mandatory, within a given time.

THE ENABLING ACT.

An initiative and referendum amendment should be made self-executing, which, of course, permits its immediate operation under existing laws; it should also be supplemented by an enabling or elaborating act, covering many minor details of the system which can not well be placed in an amendment. The purpose of the enabling act is to "facilitate the operation" of the initiative and referendum and not to impair its value and usefulness by unreasonable technical requirements. The following are the main points it should cover:

1. THE PETITION.

(a) The act should provide the form in which petitions are to be submitted.

(b) Verification.—The affidavit of the solicitor should be required and made sufficient to establish the legality and genuineness of petitions.

(c) All signatures, addresses, etc., should be duplicated by the solicitor.

"Hundreds of names and addresses are poorly or illegibly written. Unless a 'key' is given the clerks must throw them out. The Oregon method of having the signatures rewritten on the back of the petition sheets by the solicitors has been found to add heavily to the work of verification. Either the size of the petition sheets should be enlarged so that names may be recopied on the same side, or a separate sheet of the same size could be used and attached. It must be understood that this duplication of signatures by the solicitor is only to provide for the convenience and accuracy in checking up petitions by the officials. The original signatures validate the petition."

(d) Protection from fraud.—The fraudulent securing or signing of petitions should be made a felony.

(e) Sufficiency.—The official with whom the petition is filed should pass upon its sufficiency.

"This is usually the secretary of state, and a time limit should be set after which his decision can not be questioned in court. He should be required to announce his decision by a certain time, and opportunity given the petitioners to complete the petition before the election if it is found insufficient."

In case a petition is enjoined on the grounds of insufficiency the burden of proof should be placed upon the objectors.

"An injunction was brought against a petition in a Chicago court by 'the interests.' The judge proved hostile and forced the petitioners to establish the sufficiency of their petition. This and the attorneys' fees cost them nearly as much as securing the petition, which was declared valid, but not until after the election."

The proof that a petition contains fraudulent signatures should not be held to invalidate the sufficiency of the petition, provided there are enough genuine signatures to meet the legal requirements.

2. THE BALLOT.

(a) The ballot title need not be identical with the legislative title. It should state clearly the purpose of the measure.

(b) Measures should appear upon the ballot in the order in which the petitions are filed.

Ample opportunity should be given for injunction and prompt legal procedure and review by the courts to insure the fairness of the ballot title and arrangement of questions so that the voters may not be intentionally misled.

(c) The method of stating measures should be as uniform as possible, so that no confusion may occur over the effect of a positive or negative vote.

3. THE PUBLICITY PAMPHLET.

(a) The publicity pamphlet should contain arguments for and against pending measures as well as copies of the measures, and should be mailed direct to the registered voters from the office of the secretary of state.

"This is the Oregon method and it has met with pronounced success and the approval of the voters. Oregon first tried expressing the pamphlets to the county clerks, who were required to mail them out. This failed, and the present system was established. The Oklahoma plan of distributing pamphlets at the primary election has failed. The old newspaper system of advertising measures in partisan newspapers has proven a farce. Attempted circulation, or even mailing sample ballots, is very inadequate."

Arguments on measures submitted by the legislature should be made by a member or a committee of the legislature appointed by those favoring and those opposing the measures. Arguments on all measures, however submitted, should be included when offered by private citizens or organizations, they paying the exact cost to the State for the space taken. All arguments should be either signed, or a statement should be made in whose behalf the argument is made and who is paying the expense.

It is difficult to overestimate the value of this system of educating the voters. It insures intelligent voting and a much larger proportion taking part in the decision of questions.

4. THE RETURNS.

The vote upon measures should be canvassed and returned with the same dispatch as the vote upon candidates.

5. QUICK ACTION BY THE COURTS.

The courts should advance upon the docket all litigation relative to the process of submitting measures, render prompt decisions, and this should be made mandatory.

PROGRESS AND RESULTS.

In this chapter is presented in concise form the results of the adoption of the State-wide initiative and referendum in the United States. The States are listed in the chronological order of adoption. There is given a brief statement of the conditions which led to the securing of the amendment and the vote for and against; a table of votings which includes amendments submitted by the legislature as well as those submitted through the operation of the initiative and referendum, a statement as to the defects of the provision and the general results obtained.

It is impossible in the space at our command to give the entire text of the various amendments. The most vital points, however, are indicated, and to make the condensation clear the reader should consult the following:

"Explanation of terms.

"'Direct initiative' indicates that a measure proposed by petition may go directly to a vote at the next election without first being submitted to the legislature.

"'Indirect initiative' requires that a proposed measure be first submitted to the legislature. If not enacted without change or amendment, it is automatically submitted at the ensuing general election.

"'Constitutional initiative' indicates the right of the people to propose, by petition, amendments to the State constitution for adoption or rejection at the next election.

"'Statutory initiative' gives the people the right to propose and enact statute laws.

"'Referendum.'—The effect of a petition filed against an act of the legislature usually suspends the operation of the law until it is voted upon by the people. Some amendments provide, however, that the law remains in effect, and a rejection by the people acts as a repeal.

"'Emergency' refers to the power given the legislature by some amendments to inhibit the referendum and deny the people the right to vote upon any law declared to be 'immediately necessary for the preservation of the public peace, health, or safety.' Some, however, simply allow 'emergency measures' to go into effect at once, without waiting the customary 90 days, but a referendum petition may be lawfully filed against it, and it may be repealed by the people at the next election. Meanwhile it remains in operation.

"'Petitions' are usually calculated upon the total vote cast for governor at the preceding election, and are usually filed with the secretary of state.

"'Majority' refers to the size of the vote cast for a measure necessary to insure its adoption. 'Thereon' means the electors voting directly upon a given measure without reference to the number voting for candidates or other measures in the same election. The phrase 'in the election' means the total number of voters casting ballots in the election for candidates as well as for measures."

In the tables of votings the "origin" or reason why each measure was placed upon the ballot is designated as follows:

"R." (referendum) indicates a statute law passed by the legislature and referred, by a referendum petition, to the voters.

"I. B." (initiated bill), a bill or statute law initiated by the voters and submitted by petition.

"I. A." (initiated amendment), a constitutional amendment submitted to the voters by initiative petition.

"L. B." (legislative bill), a bill or statute law passed by the legislature and submitted to the voters by the legislature.

"L. A." (legislative amendment), a constitutional amendment submitted to the voters by the legislature in the customary manner.

1. SOUTH DAKOTA, 1898.

The amendment was adopted at the general election of 1898—the vote stood 23,816 for to 16,483 against. Total vote for candidates was 75,259.

The main provisions of the amendment are:

No constitutional initiative. Indirect statutory initiative, petition 5 per cent. Statutory referendum, petition 5 per cent. Emergency declared by a majority vote of legislature. Publicity, formerly by sample ballots and newspaper advertising, but legislature of 1910 established publicity pamphlet system similar to Oregon, with the exception that the people can not submit arguments therein on measures pending. Majority of the vote cast thereon decides measures.

No laws were submitted under the provisions of this amendment until the election of 1908. The use made of it from that time on is given in the table of votings.

Since the South Dakota amendment was the first to be adopted, we may naturally expect to find it not up to the standard which later States have achieved. The initiative needs to be changed to permit the submission of a measure petitioned for by the people without first being enacted by the legislature. There is no way to force a legislature to submit initiated laws, even though the constitution does command it. A direct primary law, legally petitioned for, was rejected by the legislature of 1905. The initiative should also be extended to constitutional amendments.

The "emergency" clause of the amendment is very defective. A mere majority of the legislature may remove any law from the power of the referendum by simply declaring "an emergency to exist." No petition can be circulated against a law carrying this clause, and thus the people have the referendum only at the option of the legislature.

Over 40 per cent of the laws passed in South Dakota are declared to be "emergency measures."

The legislature of 1910 provided the Oregon pamphlet system of advertising pending measures. This puts an end to another defect of the South Dakota system.

The legislature of 1899 provided that the entire text of initiative and referendum measures be printed on a separate ballot instead of the title of such measures. Due to the submission of a long military law in 1910, which occupied three-fourths of the ballot, together with five other measures, the ballot was nearly 6 feet in length. And this absurd system, provided by a legislature, has been held up as a warning all over the United States against the principle of direct legislation. The act of 1910, above noted, provides that measures be hereafter submitted by title only.

Notwithstanding the defects of the provision, some good results have followed the adoption of the initiative and referendum in South Dakota. In a recent letter to the editor of Equity former United States Senator R. F. Pettigrew says:

"No doubt the initiative and referendum amendment adopted in South Dakota, if it had been more complete and better drafted, would have been more effective, but it has worked with very beneficial effects. In the first place, it calls off the lobby which was composed of railroad attorneys and the corrupt interests, and left the legislature free to enact better laws, and as a result we have secured much better and beneficial legislation, such as the physical valuation of railroads, the reduction of express charges, the increase in the valuation of railroad properties for taxation, an antipass law, which has stopped the corruption of the voters through the issue of free passes, and a law requiring railroads to furnish cars to all shippers alike and to pay damages if they fail to do so. These acts could never have been passed under the old system. As a result we have not been obliged to use the referendum very often, but the fact that we have the power is a great check upon corrupt legislation."

II. UTAH, 1900.

The amendment was submitted to the people at the general election of 1900. The vote stood 19,219 for to 7,786 against. The total vote was 92,980.

The amendment establishes the principles of the initiative and referendum and leaves the percentages on petitions and other details to be "provided by law." Succeeding legislatures have steadily refused to put the amendment into operation. Hence Utah, though known as an initiative and referendum State, does not, in fact, have the system in operation and is an example of the unwisdom of leaving vital details to legislatures.

III. OREGON, 1902.

The amendment was submitted to the people at the general election of 1902. The vote stood 62,024 for to 5,688 against. The total vote was 90,692.

Oregon was the first State to adopt a complete and effective system. The main provisions of the amendment are:

Direct initiative on constitutional amendments and statutory laws, 8 per cent petition. Referendum, 5 per cent petition. Emergency by a majority vote of the legislature and inhibits referendum. Majority of the "votes cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity pamphlet, containing copies of measures to be voted upon, is mailed directly to the voters by the secretary of state. Arguments for and against measures are inserted by private citizens or organizations, they paying the proportional cost per page of space taken. The intelligent use of the initiative and referendum in Oregon is largely due to this publicity pamphlet, or "Voter's textbook," as it is often called.

Oregon has the best system of direct legislation by the people of any State to date. There are no hampering "safeguards and restrictions" to render abortive the efforts of her progressive and patriotic citizens. This explains why Oregon's record for accomplishments with the system is the most notable of any State in the Union. The weak point in the Oregon amendment is the emergency clause, which permits a majority of the legislature to suspend the referendum on a measure declared to be "necessary to the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety." Efforts are being made, however, to change this provision so that no "emergency" may be declared excepting by a two-thirds vote of the legislature, and that such emergency shall not inhibit the power of the referendum, but simply permit the law to go into operation at once and continue until repealed by a vote of the people at the polls, provided they so decide, or by a vote of the legislature itself.

The tremendous results obtained by the people of Oregon by use of the initiative and referendum have attracted nation-wide attention. Oregon has a vigorous citizenship. There are many progressive organizations in the State, such as the People's Power League, the Federation of Labor, the Farmer's Grange, etc. Having a workable direct-legislation provision with which results could be attained, these organizations have led the people in the fight against political corruption. These efforts have resulted in the destruction of the old-time political "machines."

Corporation newspapers and politicians in Oregon and throughout the entire Nation have sought to belittle the results of the "Oregon system," as it has come to be known, in a vain attempt to check the progress of direct legislation in other States. By flagrant misrepresentations they have sought to convey the impression that the whole "experiment is a dismal failure."

The true status of the public mind, however, may be gained from the following extracts taken from the testimony of representative citizens of Oregon in every walk of life:

A supreme court judge: Will R. King, associate justice of the supreme court, writes:

"In my opinion, the initiative and referendum has been instrumental in giving the people of this State more wise and progressive legislation than they would have secured under the representative system only. * * * I consider the initiative and referendum a safe and practicable method of enacting legislation, and will further add that I think it has come to stay. It is only a question of time when every State of the Union will incorporate it in some form into their fundamental law."

United States Senators: Senator JONATHAN BOURNE, in a speech before the United States Senate, said:

"Results obtained under direct legislation in Oregon compare so favorably with the work of a legislative assembly that an attempt to repeal the initiative and referendum would be defeated overwhelmingly. No effort has ever been made. * * * The results show that the people have exercised discriminating judgment."

Senator GEORGE A. CHAMBERLAIN writes:

"The people of this State are entirely satisfied with this amendment. * * * I think you will find that opposition to the Oregon system finds its inspiration in the corrupt machine politician and in those who believe that the liberties of the citizen should be subordinated to the so-called rights of property."

A university president: Prof. William N. Ferrin, president of Pacific Grove University, writes:

"The old-time political leaders do not love the initiative and referendum. They have made several attempts to modify the provisions in important particulars and every such attempt has been defeated at the polls by a decisive vote. In my judgment the system is more strongly intrenched in popular favor than ever before. * * * It is gratifying to note that the voters make a study of the measures to be voted upon and exercise a commendable degree of care in marking the ballot. * * * The campaigns on these measures increase the intelligence of the voters and arouse their interest in political matters generally."

An editor: C. S. Jackson, publisher of the Oregon Daily Journal, says:

"The initiative and referendum has done one service in Oregon which is invaluable. It has given the little man—the common man—interest and hope in self-government which he never before realized."

A labor leader: Alfred D. Cridge, editor of the Labor Press, official organ of organized labor in Oregon, says:

"Before we had direct legislation, whenever we would ask a member of the legislature to vote for some law for the protection or benefit of the working masses he would say, 'I will think it over.' Now they come to us and say, 'Boys, what do you want?' They at least give us respectful consideration. Through the initiative we have secured a good employers' liability law and many other acts for the protection of the life and limbs of men engaged in hazardous occupations."

A farmer: Austin Buxton, former master of the State Grange and one of the leading farmers of the State, writes:

"After several years' experience it gives me pleasure to give direct legislation my hearty indorsement. The people are not indifferent. They realize the responsibility resting upon them and thoroughly inform themselves on measures. The results of the ballot on legislative measures have been surprising to those who have predicted evil."

A capitalist: Hon. William M. Ladd, head of one of the oldest and largest banking houses on the Pacific coast, and reputed to be the richest man in the Northwest, after the election of 1910, said in a public statement:

"I would rather trust the people to vote on 32 or any other number of important measures than the legislature."

And Mr. Ladd was at one time a member of the legislature himself.

IV. NEVADA, 1905.

The amendment was submitted to the people at the general election of 1905. The vote stood 4,393 for to 792 against. The total vote for candidates was 12,050.

The provisions of the amendment were:

No initiative. Referendum on statute laws by 10 per cent petition. No emergency cause. Majority of "the electors voting at a State election" is necessary to reject an act of the legislature. Publicity by newspaper advertising.

Under the provisions of this amendment only one law has been referred to the people. This statute provided for the organization of a State police force and carried an appropriation of $150,000 for its support and maintenance. It was referred at the election of 1908. The vote stood 9,954 yes to 9,078 no. The vote cast on the measure was 80 per cent of the total vote for candidates, which was 24,526.

The initiative added in 1912.

At the general election of 1912 an amendment providing for the initiative was submitted to the people and adopted. Figures not available at this writing.

The provisions are:

Indirect constitutional and statutory initiative, petition of 10 per cent. A majority of the voters "voting thereon" decides measures. Publicity is not provided for.

With the exception of having the "majority joker" in the referendum, Nevada has now a good system. The initiative has no "restrictions," and the legislature is free to adopt the pamphlet system of advertising proposed measures.

V. MONTANA, 1906.

The amendment was submitted to the people at the general election of 1906. The vote stood 35,374 for to 6,616 against. The total vote for candidates was 56,041.

The provisions of the amendment are:

No constitutional initiative. Direct statutory initiative, 8 per cent petition. Referendum, 5 per cent petition. All petitions must be signed in each of two-fifths of the counties of the State by the above per cents. A petition of 15 per cent in a majority of the counties is necessary to suspend the operation of a law until the vote can be taken. A majority of the vote "cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity is secured by a pamphlet similar to Oregon.

Results: The distribution of petitions required has proven so costly and cumbersome that no use has been made of the amendment, although several attempts have been made, until 1912, when, by dint of great effort, the People's Power League of Montana was able to secure petitions for the submission of the following measures:

By the initiative: A good direct primary law; a corrupt-practices act; direct election of United States Senators; a presidential primary law.

By the referendum: The military law.

VI. OKLAHOMA, 1907.

The initiative and referendum were a part of the constitution of the new State upon being admitted into the Union in 1907. The popular vote upon the constitution stood 180,333 for to 73,059 against.

The provisions of the direct legislation section are:

Constitutional initiative, petition of 15 per cent. Statutory initiative, 8 per cent. Referendum, 5 per cent, suspends law. Emergency declared by a majority vote of the legislature inhibits referendum. Majority required of all votes cast "in such election" to enact initiative measures. A majority of the votes cast "thereon" decides referendum measures. Publicity is secured by a crude pamphlet system distributed at the primary election booths.

"The (Oklahoma) provision that requires a majority of all votes cast before a measure carries almost destroys the effect of our law. It ought by all means to be changed or our initiative is a dead letter.

"Prof. J. H. SAWTELL,
"Principal Department of Political Science,
"University of Oklahoma."

"To require a majority of all votes cast in the election to adopt a law [instead of a majority cast thereon], subjects us to the rule of the careless, indifferent, ignorant voter, instead of permitting the intelligent, interested voters, who study a question and then express their wish at the ballot box, to control.

"CAMPBELL RUSSELL,
"Ex State Senator, Member State Board of Agriculture."

"NOTE.—In Oklahoma any question submitted to the people, either by the legislature or by initiative, must receive a majority of all votes cast to be enacted. But the constitution gives the legislature or the governor power to call a special election for such measures. Otherwise they are referred at a general election. No initiative measure referred to the people at a general election has passed, although five important measures were lost which received a majority of the vote cast thereon. * * *

"Most of the amendments in other States do not give the governor or legislature power to call special elections, so the vast majority of measures are submitted at general elections. Of course you see from it that in general elections candidates are voted for and many ignorant voters vote for candidates and do not vote on measures. Hence it is difficult, in a general election, to get a majority of 'all the votes cast in the election.' At a special election, called to vote only on measures, there are no candidates voted for, so this surplus of ignorant voters who vote only for candidates do not come into such an election at all.

"Gov. Haskell favored the State capital bill, the railroad merger amendment, and the 'grandfather clause' in the amendment disfranchising negroes. Hence he submitted them at special elections. Had he not favored them he would have left them over till the general election. The two he was especially interested in—State capital and negro disfranchisement—carried. They were submitted at special elections to make sure. The danger of this is obvious. If the political machine favors a particular thing it can get action. If not, the proposed measure may wait and go down at the general election. The expense problem is also important."

The amendment was submitted at the general election of 1908. The vote stood: 51,991 for, to 23,712 against. The total vote for candidates was 106,335.

The provisions of the amendment are:

No constitutional initiative. Statutory initiative, petition of 12,000 voters. Referendum, petition 10,000 voters. Emergency, well guarded; a two-thirds vote of the legislature permits a law to become operative at once, but it is still subject to referendum. A majority of the "vote given thereon" decides measures. Publicity is secured by the distribution of sample ballots containing the titles of the measures voted upon. The most notable achievement of the people of Maine has been the adoption by the initiative of a good direct primary law, after the law had been rejected by the legislature.

The absence of the constitutional initiative is a serious defect in the Maine amendment. It was omitted from the amendment in deference to the temperance people, who did not want the question of State-wide prohibition even submitted to the people. Behind this "cover" lay the opposition of the usual corporation lobby. Thousands of acres of forest lands and "wild lands" in northern Maine are owned by the railroads and a few private individuals. These lands under the protection of the present constitution are taxed at much less than their real valuation. Also the forests are being destroyed, and the water-power rights are being given away. All these things, and other things, are serious economic problems for the State, and the manner in which they have been handled by the political bosses has retarded the development of the Commonwealth. Maine will not be free until the people get control of the constitution. The use of the referendum was, until 1911, confined chiefly to the settlement of a few local questions which had no proper place upon the State ballot. They should have been left for the people of the localities interested to adjust. But they constituted a rebuke to the legislature for unwarranted interference in local affairs and favoritism to the vested interests.

VIII. MISSOURI, 1908.

The amendment was submitted at the general election of 1908. The vote stood: 177,615 for, to 147,290 against. The total vote for candidates was 715,874.

The provisions of the amendment are:

Direct constitutional and statutory initiative, petition "not more than 8 per cent; reduced by legislature to 5 per cent; distributed in two-thirds of the congressional districts. Referendum, petition 5 per cent distributed as initiative. Emergency declared by majority of the legislature, and removes law from power of the referendum. Majority of the votes "cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity by old system of advertising in newspapers.

The Missouri provision, which requires the requisite percentage of signatures (5 per cent for both initiative and referendum) to be secured in each of two-thirds of the congressional districts, has been found more expensive and difficult to overcome than was anticipated. The futility of publishing proposed measures in newspapers, which system was adopted by the Legislature of Missouri, is demonstrated by the results of the election of 1910.

The above figures, as far as they go, were furnished by the secretary of state and are authentic. The onslaught on the single-tax amendment carried everything down.

Dr. William Preston Hill and other keen observers estimate that not over one-third of the voters were reached by the newspapers, and thus had no adequate knowledge of the merits of the questions voted upon. They did know that many of the amendments offered by the legislature increased the tax burden and that the prohibition question was to be decided. Missouri has large brewery interests, and the State is decidedly "wet." The brewery interests, which had unlimited funds, were able to monopolize the publicity field. There was a general disposition to vote "no." Thus the meritorious amendment placing the State university on a tax-levy basis for financial support, instead of by appropriations by the legislature, went down with the rest. The voters can not exercise discrimination unless they are properly informed. The pamphlet system is the one effective method of doing this. In 1910 Oregon voted also on the prohibition question. But this did not overshadow the election. Other questions were decided on their merits, because the people had opportunity to educate themselves upon them.

IX. MICHIGAN, 1908.

A new constitution, the work of a constitutional convention, was adopted by the voters of Michigan in 1908. A majority of the delegates to this convention were pledged to the initiative and referendum, but the railroad lobby proved too strong. The direct-legislation section provides for a constitutional initiative, 20 per cent petition, and initiated amendments go to a vote of the people, "unless the legislature in joint convention shall disapprove of the proposed amendment by a majority of the members elected."

The high percentage for the petition has been found impracticable, so no use has been made of the provision. The power given the legislature to prevent the submission of an amendment petitioned for is contrary to the whole purpose of the initiative.

X. ARKANSAS, 1910.

An amendment was submitted to the voters at the State election of 1910. The vote stood 91,363 for to 39,680 against. The total vote for candidates was 150,412.

The provisions of the amendment are:

Direct constitutional and statutary initiative, petition, 8 per cent. Referendum, 5 per cent, does not suspend law. Emergency, declared by a majority of the legislature, inhibits the referendum. Majority of the votes "cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity is secured by newspaper advertising.

An ambiguity in the initiative clause of the amendment led to some confusion. The section reads:

"The legislative power of this State shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate and a house of representatives, but the people of each municipality, each county, and of the State reserve to themselves power to propose laws and amendments to the constitution and to enact or reject the same at the polls, etc."

It was claimed by some that this gave cities and towns the right to enact laws and constitutional provisions in defiance of the State constitution. That the legislators had any such intention is of course absurd. There is no doubt but that the section was carelessly worded in an endeavor to be brief and include the State-wide and local initiative in one sentence. The matter went to the supreme court, and it was decided that no local measure could override the State constitution.

The Arkansas Legislature in an enabling act adopted the newspaper method of publishing proposed measures. The election of 1912 demonstrated in Arkansas, as elsewhere, that this is frightfully expensive and does not meet the need of educating the voters upon the issues submitted.

XI. COLORADO, 1910.

At a special session of the legislature, called by Gov. Shafroth, in September, 1910, an amendment was passed and submitted to the people at the general election in November. The vote stood 89,141 for to 28,698 against. The total vote for candidates was 213,275.

The provisions of the amendment are:

Direct constitutional and statutory initiative, petition of 8 per cent, Referendum, petition of 5 per cent, suspends law. Emergency, declared by a majority of the legislature, prevents use of the referendum. Majority of the votes "cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity: Amendment provides specifically for newspaper advertising.

delegates to the constitutional convention, elected by the people to draft a constitution for the new State, met at Phoenix, and the constitution thus framed was submitted to the electors on February 9, 1911. It was approved by a vote of 12,534 for to 3,920 against.

The initiative and referendum provisions are as follows:

Direct constitutional initiative, 15 per cent petition. Direct statutory initiative, 10 per cent petition. Referendum, 5 per cent petition, suspends operation of law. Emergency, declared by a two-thirds vote of legislature, inhibits referendum. Majority of the votes "cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity is made mandatory.

The first legislature of the new State, which met in March, 1912, passed an act establishing the pamphlet system of publishing proposed measures similar to that used in Oregon.

XIII. NEW MEXICO, 1911.

New Mexico was admitted under the same conditions as Arizona (see above). The proposed constitution was adopted by the people on January 21, 1911, by a vote of 31,724 for to 13,399 against.

The direct legislation provision is: Referendum only, petition of 10 per cent, distributed in each of three-fourths of the counties, may submit a law for repeal at the next election. A petition of 25 per cent, filed in 90 days from adjournment of the legislature, and distributed in each of three-fourths of the counties, will suspend a law and submit it to a vote at the next election. Majority of votes "cast thereon" determines, but 40 per cent of the total vote must be cast against a law to secure its rejection.

The provision is, of course, a fraud. The petition required is prohibitive both in respect to size and the distribution in three-fourths of the counties.

XIV. CALIFORNIA, 1911.

The amendment was adopted at a special election held on October 10, 1911, at which a group of 23 new constitutional amendments were submitted to the people. The vote on the initiative and referendum stood 138,181 for to 44,850 against.

The provisions of the amendment are: Provides for both direct constitutional initiative, by petition of 8 per cent, and indirect constitutional initiative, by petition of 5 per cent. Statutory initiative is on the same basis. Referendum, petition of 5 per cent, suspends operation of the law. Emergency, declared by two-thirds vote of legislature, does not remove law from power of referendum. Majority of votes "cast thereon" decides measures. Publicity is to be had through system provided by legislature and made mandatory.

Figures for the November, 1912, election are not yet available, but the following letter to Equity, from Mr. William C. Clark, of Oakland, is very informing:

"Your letter of October 10 was duly received. I have been waiting to get the complete returns on the measures submitted to the electors at the November election before writing you as you desired. Owing to court proceedings the returns are tied up in some of the counties and I have been as yet unable to get the returns. However, I thought it best not to wait longer for the statement you desired. Let me first say that I think the electors showed wisdom in carrying the measures they did and in defeating those they did. Perhaps I take this view as only those measures were carried which I myself voted for.

"At the election held November 5 there were eight measures submitted to the electors for their approval or rejection. Two of these were constitutional amendments passed by the last (special) session of the legislature by the requisite two-third vote of all members elected to each house. The first of these added irrigation district bonds to United States, State, county, municipal, and school-district bonds, as being sufficient when approved by the proper officers to secure State moneys deposited in the banks in the State. This amendment carried by a very large majority. The second amendment provided for free textbooks in the public schools of the State (excepting high schools). This also carried by a large majority.

"The next three measures were related laws passed by the last (special) session and submitted by referendum petition. They created a new office of "register of voters." While the law had to be general in terms for all the counties, by making the salary merely nominal in most counties and combining the office with that of county clerk (who now performs the duties transferred to the register by the new laws) it in effect amounted to special legislation for practically but one county. It was a political law to oust the county clerk in that county from such influence over elections as such position gave him and confer the duties through appointment by the board of supervisors on one of their own men by the faction then in control of the board. All three measures were rejected by the electors by decisive majorities.

"The last three measures were submitted by initiative petition. All were beaten at the polls. The first of these initiative measures was a constitutional amendment primarily for the purpose of enabling San Francisco to annex surrounding territory, if approved by the voters of such territory and the counties affected at an election to be held for that purpose. It was an unfair measure in that it limited the population of the territory that might be included in such combined district to 350,000. This made it apply only to San Francisco and Los Angeles. It was fought vigorously by Oakland, as, if adopted, it would enable San Francisco to annex Oakland, while preventing Oakland from annexing surrounding territory under its population limitation and at the same time, by omitting a present provision of the constitution, making it impossible for Oakland to form a city and county government for itself.

"The next measure permitted betting on horse races within the racing parks by the Paris and mutual systems of placing bets. The last legislature had effectually stopped betting on horse races; this measure under a somewhat misleading title again permitted betting on races. It was beaten by a big majority.

"The last initiative measure was the so-called home-rule taxation amendment to the constitution. It permitted the classification by the communities having the power to levy taxes of property for purposes of taxation and enabled them to raise taxes in practically any manner they chose. It was fathered by the single taxers. It carried in San Francisco and Los Angeles, but was beaten in the State at large.

"Summing up, the two amendments to the constitution proposed by the legislature were adopted by large majorities. The three referendum measures, all forming together but one proposition, were rejected by the electors. All three initiative measures—two constitutional amendments and one law—were rejected by the electors. If I get the returns soon, I will send them to you.

"Very truly, yours,

"WM. C. CLARK."

XV. NEBRASKA, 1912.

The amendment was adopted at the general election of 1912. The vote stood 189,200 for to 15,315 against. Total vote, 259,124. This unusual majority is accounted for by the fact that the question was placed in the column with candidates and received every straight party vote in its favor unless the voter specifically crossed out the amendment. This mode of amending the constitution has been adopted to overcome the difficulty of securing a majority of "all votes cast in the election" to adopt an amendment as required by the constitution. Whenever a political convention or a party in a primary vote adopt an amendment it is placed on the ballot with candidates of that party and gets the straight vote. This is an unjust method, but the only possible way to make changes with the majority joker in the constitution.

The provisions of the amendment are: Direct, constitutional initiative, petition of 15 per cent. Statutory initiative, petition of 10 per cent. Referendum, petition of 10 per cent suspends operation of law. Two-fifths (36) of the counties of the State must each furnish a quota of 5 per cent toward all petitions. Emergency, by a majority vote of legislature, does not inhibit referendum. Majority of the votes "cast thereon" decides measures, but amendments to the constitution must receive also a favorable vote of 35 per cent of the vote cast in the election. Publicity is not provided for.

Also, amendments concerning the following subjects were carried by large majorities at the 1912 election:

Legislative salaries.
Board of control.
Biennial elections.
Home rule.

XVI. WASHINGTON, 1912.

The amendment was adopted November 5, 1912, by the following vote:

	Yes.	No.	Per cent total vote.
Total vote cast for President, 322,799.
Initiative and referendum amendment	110,110	43,905	50
Recall amendment	112,321	46,372	52

No constitutional initiative. Statutory initiative, both direct and indirect, on petition of 10 per cent, but not to exceed 50,000 voters. Referendum, on petition of 6 per cent, but not to exceed 30,000 voters, suspends operation of law. Emergency by a majority vote of legislature inhibits referendum. Majority of the votes "cast thereon" decides measures, but one-third of the voters must vote on them. Publicity made mandatory on legislature.

WYOMING.

Wyoming voted on an amendment November 5, 1912, but it was lost by the following vote:

Total vote cast	42,296
For the initiative and referendum amendment	20,579
Against the initiative and referendum amendment	3,446
Necessary to pass	21,149
Failed by	570

Because it failed to get a "majority of all votes cast in the election."

Per cent total vote cast on amendment, 57.

It is fortunate that the amendment was lost, as it was full of "jokers." It required 25 per cent petitions, which requirement is prohibitive, no emergency provision, and majority "at such election" required on constitutional amendments, instead of thereon. This requirement is what prevented this amendment from being adopted, which was fortunate in this instance. Doubtless the next initiative and referendum amendment offered to the people of Wyoming will be worthy of adoption, and then the good people of that State will doubtless adopt it with a majority of "all votes cast in the election."

MISSISSIPPI.

Mississippi also voted on an initiative and referendum amendment in 1912. It was also carried by a majority vote, but was lost on account of the "all votes cast in the election" provision in the present constitution. The vote was:

For	25,153
Against	13,383
Total vote	64,529

Failed to pass, since it did not get a majority of all votes cast.

For the provisions of the amendment submitted, see July, 1912, Equity, page 98. It will be seen that the petitions were much too high, and that the "majority of all votes cast in the election" joker is present as to the initiative, the very one in the present constitution that caused the above defeat. Doubtless the good people of Mississippi will soon have an opportunity to vote on a much better amendment and carry it.

MONTANA "BEFORE TAKING" THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

[We desired to present in this issue several "before and after" contrasts—that is, before "taking" the initiative and referendum and after. We have not been able to get as much matter of that kind as we desired, but the following, from Dr. W. G. Eggleston, now of Portland, Oreg., presents Montana very graphically.—Ed.]

Previous to 1896, when I went to Montana as editor of the Helena Independent, there had been some sporadic discussion of direct legislation in that State. In 1896, Robert E. Smith, Populist, was elected governor on a Democratic-Populist fusion ticket. In his message to the legislature of 1897 he recommended the submission of a direct-legislation amendment, but the recommendation was rejected by the democratic majority, which was controlled by Marcus Daly, acting for himself and the railroads.

Montana was then, as it is now, a politically "rotten borough." The people had but little more voice in making the laws under which they had to live than in making laws for Yucatan or Nova Scotia. As compared with what the people got or could get in the way of beneficial legislation, the crumbs gathered by Lazarus were a banquet.

Legislative bribery was usual and notorious. In the legislature of 1897, one poor fellow, after receiving his share of spoils, became intoxicated and talked. He was expelled from the house, not so much for taking a bribe as for committing the crime of mentioning it in public. Some of the men who voted to expel him were more guilty than he.

The State election of 1898 was fought on the issue of "W. A. Clark for the United States Senate"; and in that year, and in the legislature of 1899, when Clark was first "elected," Montana's political clearing-house figures attained a dizzy apex; but even those figures did not mark the extent of political and legislative corruption in the State, for in addition to sums paid for Clark votes, some of the "incorruptible tribunes of the people" received as much as $10,000 each not to vote for Clark.

Joseph K. Toole, who forced the initiative and referendum into practical politics in Montana and made it a "question before the house," was elected governor in 1900. The legislature of 1901, which elected Clark the second time, was about as bad as its predecessors. In 1902 Senator Clark and the Amalgamated Copper Co. formed a sort of "holy alliance," one of the objects of which was to eliminate Toole from politics. The result was the practical annihilation of the Democratic Party in Montana. The State senate remained Democratic, but the house was captured by the Republicans. After the election, Gov. Toole, being impressed with the desirability of a direct primary law and other reforms, made a study of the Oregon initiative and referendum amendment and its results, and in a strong message urged the legislature to submit the Oregon amendment to the people. The Republican house, wishing to make a record that meant nothing, adopted a clumsy counterfeit of the Oregon amendment and sent it to the Democratic senate.

If that reactionary and crooked senate had understood the measure adopted by the house, it would have submitted it to the voters. But, being as ignorant as it was crooked, it vainly imagined that the toy balloon was a menace to established institutions and killed it.

In December, 1903, F. Augustus Heinze called a mass meeting at Helena, and unto the meeting twin political parties were born—the antitrust Democratic Party and the antitrust Republican Party. The platform adopted by the twins consisted of Gov. Toole's message of the preceding January to the legislature. That act frightened the Republicans, for the legislature to be elected in 1904 was to elect a United States Senator.

With perhaps a dozen exceptions, the Democratic and Republican politicians of the State were opposed to direct legislation, but the Montana Direct Legislation League, a formidable body of seven or eight men, made so much noise that the machine politicians believed the whole State was enlisted for the initiative and referendum. To curry favor with the voters, the Republicans held their State convention first, though the Democrats were in power, and prepared a glittering platform that declared for practically everything in Gov. Toole's message, but everything was "carefully safeguarded" by hand-picked weasel words.

The Democratic convention met and adopted a platform in which every plank meant what it said and said precisely what was wanted. The Republicans captured the legislature and claimed that the people had indorsed their "carefully safeguarded" straddle of direct legislation, which in the campaign was construed to mean everything, and subsequently construed by the Republican caucus to mean almost nothing. That party caucus, practically every member of which was untrue to his oath of office, gave a political gold brick to the people.

During the campaign of 1906, when the initiative and referendum was on the ballot, it was ignored by the newspapers—except two, one of which bitterly opposed it—and by the politicians. The people heard of it only through the circulars issued by our small but noisy Direct Legislation League, which had less than $1,000 to spend to circularize 45,000 voters. Yet the amendment was adopted by a majority of about 6 to 1. I have not the county figures at hand, but my recollection is that it carried in every county.

In justice to myself, I should explain that at that stage of the growth of direct legislation I believed it would be injurious to the initiative and referendum to have a State reject an amendment for the reform. Hostile newspapers and politicians would have carefully refrained from explaining that the measure was seriously defective, and an adverse vote would have been heralded and advertised all over the country as "the vote of a great and progressive State against the initiative and referendum fad." But for that certainty the amendment would have been killed in the legislature of 1905 by the sincere friends of the initiative and referendum. In the present stage of the growth of direct legislation it would be worse than folly for any friend of the movement to accept such an amendment as was submitted and adopted in Montana.

W. G. EGGLESTON.

However, as we have recently seen, something has been accomplished in Montana with the amendment as adopted. Accompanying the above article, Dr. Eggleston sent a letter so scintillating that we obtained his permission to present it here:

"See how generous I am. You asked for 500 words, and I have given you about 800, because I have heard that the Lord loveth a cheerful giver, and it's too much trouble to boil words now after I have done nothing but boil and boil for the last 18 months. I have had to do so much condensing that I feel as if I'd like to spill an unabridged dictionary into any ear or column that offers itself.

"Anyway, trying to compress a Montana situation of 10 years into 500 words is like carrying Lake Superior around in a pocket flask. Oregon is the eighth State in which I have lived and taken an active interest in politics, and I have known personally every member of 10 legislatures in different States. It is my deliberate opinion that a Montana Legislature of 100 members could sit blindfolded in a political poker game and skin an average Illinois Legislature down to a necktie and a pair of socks.

"In 1907 I reported both houses of the Montana Legislature, and got so cross-eyed watching the bunch that I had to walk sideways to find my way home. In an assemblage of Montana legislators the most corrupt and degenerate gas meter becomes an emblem of purity, house, and respectability."

NEVADA.

Possibly Montana was an exception—a "horrible example." Let us hope so. Senator NEWLANDS, of Nevada, answered our inquiry as follows:

"I do not know that there was anything particular in the political conditions that prompted the adoption of these reforms except the fact that Nevada has been practically under Democratic control for the last 15 years and that the advanced legislation under Democratic influence has been upon the lines of political progress, such lines as have been pursued in Oregon and Wisconsin.

"Shortly after the referendum was adopted we had occasion to test it in a vote regarding the State police bill, which was passed by the legislature of 1907 for the maintenance of public order, there being no militia in the State. The test under the referendum was made very shortly after the serious strike at Goldfield, during which time the Federal troops were ordered by Mr. Roosevelt into Nevada. The discussion of this bill in the campaign of 1908 led to an exhaustive consideration on the stump and before the people of the requirements of public order, with the view to securing the rights of labor as well as the rights of property. The result of the very thorough discussion was that the State police bill was sustained by a popular vote. I think that the discussion was an enlightening one to the entire people of Nevada, and tended to strengthen the foundations of public order.

"Very sincerely, yours,

"FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS."

LOUISIANA.

Louisiana is not a direct-legislation State, but there were 19 constitutional amendments submitted to its voters November 5. Yet there was no complaint about the great number, and any strain on the intellects of the voters by requiring a vote on all these "in a single day." These specious arguments are brought forward only as against measures brought to a direct vote by the people, by means of the initiative and referendum. When the legislature submits many measures to a direct vote, it is all right.

Another thing that Louisiana proves: That the voters are able to vote discriminatingly, even when so many amendments are presented at one time. Only incomplete figures are as yet available, so we can not present details until next issue, but the figures at hand indicate that 10 of the amendments were adopted and 9 rejected. Further, that the adoptions were by heavy majorities, most of them 4 or 5 to 1, and the rejections were almost equally decisive except one. Here we find no general inclination to vote either yes or no, but there was sharp discrimination.

Another thing: A study of the text and vote indicated that the negro voters were not in evidence on these amendments. A reopening of the "grandfather clause" for the purpose of allowing illiterate whites to vote was adopted by almost 4 to 1. Our contention has always been that ignorance, neither white nor black, will, as a rule, vote on measures submitted. Ignorant voters will usually vote for candidates, but they have not the interest nor intelligence to vote on measures. Therefore neither the negro vote in the South nor the ignorant foreign vote in the North need be feared.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM IN COMMITTEE GOVERNMENT.

The National Progressive Party will "take its own medicine." It advocates the initiative and referendum and will use these instruments in the government of its committees. At the meeting in Chicago, December 11, the following was adopted:

"Whereas the principles relative to popular government embodied in the National Progressive platform should be applied to all national, State, and local committees of the Progressive Party wherever not in conflict with State laws: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That 25 per cent of the membership of the national committee may join in a petition requesting the chairman or executive committee to adopt some certain policy or motion, and if said chairman or executive committee fails or refuses to accept such recommendations the petitioning members may initiate it."

AN ERA OF CONSTITUTION REVISING.

The example of Ohio, and a steadily increasing realization that old constitutions do not meet the needs of the present time, has caused the progressive people of many States to advocate the calling of constitutional conventions in the near future. It now seems probable that constitutional conventions will be called, perhaps during 1913, in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and New York. The process of amending seems now to be too slow to satisfy the popular demand. The old State constitutions will probably meet the same fate that many of the old city charters have met, and that many more will meet.

Two things are uppermost in the minds of those who advocate constitutional conventions; they are, first, public control of public affairs by means of the initiative, referendum, and recall; second, local autonomy, by means of abolishing the bondage under which cities have been to State legislatures, and the establishment of complete home rule for municipalities and counties in all matters of entirely a local nature.

Many other things are also prominent in the minds of progressives of all parties, as adequate corporation control, the prevention of corrupt political practices, the regulation of the hours of labor of women and children, etc. But as these things can be gotten by statute, constitutional changes are not necessary. But constitutional changes are necessary to get the initiative, referendum, and recall, home rule, etc.

If we may venture to express our wish, it is this: We hope that States, particularly important States like those mentioned above, will not be in a great hurry to call constitutional conventions. Let us do what we can by statute and the slow process of amending for the present. We are on the eve of important developments in the processes of government. Let these be developed and tried out in a small way, which now seems probable in the next few years. These demonstrations will throw a strong light upon the problem of what the future State government should be.

THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM IN MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

The progress of the State-wide initiative and referendum has been rapid, but its application to town and city government has been still more rapid. This is due, no doubt, to the fact that legislatures have the power to confer these powers upon local governments without first securing a constitutional amendment. This can be done either by a general law, special charters, or through general acts permitting cities to adopt the commission form of government. The tremendous growth of the latter has greatly accelerated the movement for self-government in cities, as has also the "home-rule" movement. The following is a general view of the present status of the initiative and referendum in municipalities, with the percentages required on petition.

I.—States in which the State-wide initiative and referendum constitutional amendment extends these powers to cities.

[1] Compulsory ordinances on franchises and contracts over $1,000.

To avoid confusion, we group here the States in which the cities have the right to adopt the initiative and referendum through powers conferred by general laws. These acts grant home rule in charter making with many variations, some limited, some absolute, some permitting the "commission form," etc.; but all extend the powers of direct legislation in local affairs, no matter what the form of city government may be. The figures indicate the percentages required on petitions to invoke the initiative or the referendum.

A large number of the cities which have adopted the commission form of city government, either under general or special State laws, have incorporated the initiative and referendum in the scheme. We append a list of these cities, furnished us by the Short Ballot Organization of New York. The percentages required on petitions are indicated.

The wide variations above will be noted with surprise. The movement has gone along so rapidly that many of the above figures seem to have been arrived at by hasty guess, rather than by inquiry and deliberate judgment. As a still further contribution to the information on this subject, the following is clipped from an abstract of a proposed act for the third-class cities of Pennsylvania, which consists of all cities under 100,000 inhabitants:

"REFERENDUM.

"All grants of franchise to public-service corporations within the city must be submitted to a referendum vote of the electors without petition. All other ordinances, except such as are certified to be urgent for the preservation of public peace, health, or safety, shall be submitted to referendum vote upon petition of 10 per cent of the electors. Not more than one referendum election to be held within a period of six month, but more than one ordinance may be submitted at the same election.

"INITIATIVE.

"Ordinances may be brought before councils upon the initiative petition of 15 per cent of voters."

This bill was approved by the convention of allied civic bodies, at Harrisburg, October 2, 1912, and will be introduced in the new legislature by Senator H. A. Clark, of Erie, Pa.

From all the above information let us draw the following as "about right" on the subject:

First, all grants of public franchises should be submitted to a referendum vote, preferably at a regular election, without petition.

Second, larger percentages for petitions can be reasonably required for small cities than for large cities; or, to put it the other way, smaller percentages should be required for large cities than for small cities. And to do this we must establish a standard. The Pennsylvania standard is 10 per cent for the referendum in cities up to 100,000 population. It seems to us that this could be reasonably increased to, say, 12 per cent or 15 per cent for cities of 10,000 population or under. A more minute gradation might be made if considered advisable. However, let us recognize the principle that small populations should have larger percentages and large populations should have smaller percentages; and the Pennsylvania standard of 10 per cent for 100,000 population, for the referendum is about right as a starting point. A larger petition should be required when a special election is demanded. The mayor should have the power to call a special election at his discretion, on a referendum matter, when not demanded in the petition.

Third, a larger petition should be required for the initiative than for the referendum. The reason is obvious; and the above remarks concerning percentages varying according to population and concerning special elections apply here. When 10 per cent is required for the referendum, about 15 per cent should be required for the initiative; that is, an increase of about 50 per cent. The initiative, being positive in its action, should be more difficult to invoke than the referendum, which is merely negative in its action. But the above Pennsylvania standard for the initiative can not be accepted. That provides only for bringing ordinances before councils, which is not the true initiative. The true initiative is a process by which an ordinance may be proposed by an established number of voters and submitted to a direct vote of the electorate.

It will be noted that we advocate proportionately larger petitions for the local initiative and referendum than for the State-wide initiative and referendum. The reason should be obvious to all. It is easier to get a certain percentage of a town or city than the same percentage of a State. In a city the voters are compact, while in a State they are scattered, and it is proportionately easier, anyway, to get a given percentage of a small population than the same percentage of a large population. For these and other reasons the required percentage should decrease as the population increases.

Referring again to the above tables, we sincerely hope that in future years they will be made more uniform and in keeping with the suggestions above made. We fear that some of the absurdly high requirements may have proven a bar to the use of the direct ballot.

THE DIRECT PRIMARY.

The convention system of nominating candidates for political offices has constituted one of the greatest sources of strength to political machines. The control of the nominating convention was made easy through manipulation of the "primaries" or open meetings of party members in the various voting precincts at which delegates to conventions were selected. These primaries were wholly under the direction of the party leaders or local "bosses." The gross frauds and strong-arm methods practiced at these primaries constitute a black page in American political history.

The modern direct-primary movement aims at abolishing this old caucus system and substituting a regular nominating election under State control and at State expense, at which the rank and file of the voters may vote by ballot directly for their party candidates in the regular election.

It was first tried in Minneapolis in 1899, then applied to the State, and has since been adopted under various forms by a large number of States. It is needless to say that the system has been bitterly opposed by the political machines of both the dominant parties, and this opposition has resulted in the enactment of a wide variety of primary laws. Some of these are so restricted as to be but little better than the old system and have resulted in but little good.

It is entirely beyond the space at our command to give even a summary of the primary laws now in operation. In general they may be classified as—

1. Indirect, in which the voters merely select by ballot the delegates to the nominating convention; or direct, in which the voters themselves nominate the candidates.

2. State-wide, in which candidates for all offices are nominated by the voters; or limited, in which only a part of the candidates are so nominated, the remaining candidates being left to be chosen at nominating conventions.

3. Compulsory, in which all candidates for office must be nominated at the direct primary; or optional, in which case the party leaders are given the right to choose between the direct primary or the convention system in selecting their candidates.

4. Open, in which the voter is handed one or several ballots containing the candidates of all parties, and is not required to declare his party affiliations, and so votes secretly; or closed, in which he is compelled to declare his party affiliation, under certain tests laid down by the laws in his particular State, and is then handed a ballot containing the names of the candidates of the party with which he is or claims to be affiliated.

To be an effective weapon in the warfare upon machine politics and to render political parties responsible to the rank and file of their membership, experience thus far demonstrates that the primary must be held by the State and at State expense, State-wide, direct, open, and that some system of publicity be established by the State to inform the voters concerning the character and principles of aspirants for political office. To this must be added the preferential vote as established in Wisconsin, which insures majority, not merely plurality, nominations.

Setting aside all other variations, the following States have enacted laws in which candidates for office are nominated directly by the voters at the polls. Unless otherwise indicated, the application is State-wide:

Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota (except for State offices), Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio (except for Congressman and State officers), Oregon, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania (except for State officers), South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Washington, Wisconsin, Wyoming.

Among the direct primary laws so far enacted, the Wisconsin system stands as perhaps the best. A copy of the law may be had on application to the secretary of state, at Madison, Wis. We give herewith a plain synopsis of this law, and call especial attention to the provision which allows the voter to express his first and second choice for candidates.

SYNOPSIS OF THE WISCONSIN DIRECT PRIMARY LAW.

Scope: Applies to all State and local elective officials, including the office of United States Senator.

Time: Held throughout the State on the first Tuesday in September for the nomination of officers to be elected at the regular biennial elections in the even-numbered years.

By whom: The election is conducted by the State and paid for out of the public treasury.

Notice: Sixty days prior to the election the secretary of state serves notice to all city, town, and county clerks to post notices of such election.

Nominations: All candidates are nominated by petition of the voters and filed with State or local officers as the case demands. The size of petitions are as follows: For State officers, 1 per cent of the previous party vote in the State; for Congressman, 2 per cent of the party vote in his district; for lesser or for county or town officers, 3 per cent of the district affected. Legal forms for such petitions are provided, and also the method of certification.

Election inspectors: Election inspectors are chosen in suchwise that all political parties participating in the election are represented in each voting precinct.

Who may vote: Every registered voter may participate in the election. The clerks of election enter on the poll list the names of all voting.

The party test: No party test is required, and the voter is not obliged to disclose his party affiliation. The Australian ballot is used, and the voter is protected by the utmost secrecy.

The ballot: A composite ballot consisting of a separate sheet for each political party, fastened together at the top and folded, is handed the voter. He repairs to the voting booth, detaches the party sheet on which he desires to vote, marks this ballot, folds it, and also the part not used. Emerging from the booth he deposits his marked ballot in the regular box, and then deposits the unused ballots in a separate box designated "the blank-ballot box." These unused ballots are destroyed immediately after the election, by the inspectors, without inspection.

Rotation of names: The names of candidates for the respective offices are rotated upon the ballots in suchwise that each candidate's name shall appear as often at the head of the list as that of any other candidate.

Party challengers: May be appointed by the party authorities to represent each party in the voting precincts.

Party committees: The voter may write on his ballot the name of his choice for precinct party committeeman, and the one having the highest number of votes so cast is thereby elected.

Canvass and returns: The vote is canvassed as in regular elections, and the returns made to the secretary of state. The candidates receiving a majority vote (see below) for the offices they seek are declared the nominees of the party and their names appear upon the ballot in the general election.

Vacancies: Ordinary vacancies are filled by the party committees, if such vacancies occur before the general election. In case of a vacancy in the office of United States Senator a special primary must be called.

Platform convention: On the third Tuesday of September following the primary election the candidates for State offices and for the general assembly of each party must meet at the State capitol, draft a platform, and elect a State central committee. This platform is filed with the secretary of state.

MAJORITY NOMINATIONS.

The distinguishing feature of the Wisconsin law is the provision by which each voter is allowed to express his first and second choice of candidates for each office voted upon. This has been found an effective cure to one of the most vital weaknesses which the direct primary system has developed, namely, that by secretly inducing a large number of progressive candidates to enter the contest for the nomination the "machine" has been able, in countless instances, to split the anti-machine vote and then, by massing its vote against this divided field, secure for its candidate "the highest number of votes cast," and so secure the nomination.

By the Wisconsin system, however, the progressive voters may split on their first choice and then mass their votes on their second choice. Hence, unless the reactionary or machine candidate has a clear majority of all votes cast, which he seldom has, he is overcome by the second-choice votes for a progressive candidate and the antimachine forces win.

The section of the Wisconsin law providing for the first and second choice, or preferential ballot, as it is called, reads as follows:

"Each elector shall be entitled to designate on his ballot, in the manner herein provided, the name of his first choice and also the name of his second choice as nominee for each office.

"The voter shall mark his ballot in the following manner to indicate his first and second choice:

"1. He shall place a cross (X) in the first column after the name of his first-choice candidate, and a cross (X) in the second column after the name of his second-choice candidate.

"2. He shall place but one mark in any one designated space.

"3. If a voter votes either in the first or second choice column for two persons, such vote shall be counted as a first-choice vote for the person voted for whose name appears first in such column, and as a second-choice vote for the person voted for whose name appears lower in such column.

"4. A vote for one person only shall be counted as a first-choice vote, whether the voter place his cross in the first or in the second choice column.

"5. A first and second choice vote cast for the same person shall be counted as a first choice only for such person.

"Example.

C. D.

"CANVASS AND RETURNS.

"The ballots shall be counted in the following manner: As the first and second choice votes are called off from the ballots by the primary officials they shall be entered by such officials on the tally sheets in the form annexed, marked 'B,' provided for that purpose. Such official tally sheets upon which the count has been so entered shall be included in the returns of such election.

"The precinct inspectors of the election shall, on blanks to be provided for that purpose, make full and accurate returns of the votes cast for each candidate, giving both first-choice and second-choice votes, as herein provided, and shall, within 24 hours, cause such returns to be delivered to the county clerk, provided, however, that such returns shall be sent by registered mail wherever practicable. The returns shall set forth, opposite the name of each candidate, the number of first-choice votes cast for such candidate, followed horizontally by a statement of the number of second-choice votes cast by his supporters for each of the other candidates. Such tabular statement shall be substantially in the following form, the names of candidates to be arranged thereon in the order in which they appear upon the ballot:

"'B.' OFFICIAL TALLY SHEET.

"For governor.

First choice.		Second choice.
		A. B.	C. D.	E. F.	G. H.
A. B	50	.....	30	15	5
C. D	40	25	.....	10	5
E. F	25	15	7	.....	3
G. H	5	3	1	1	.....
	120	.....	.....	.....	.....

"The canvassers of the vote shall be guided by the following rules:

"1. If any candidate for an office receive a majority of the first choice votes he shall be declared nominated for such office.

"2. If no candidate is thus nominated, the name of the one having the least number of first choice votes shall be dropped and the second choice votes cast by the supporters of the dropped candidate shall be added to the first choice votes of the remaining candidates for whom they were cast.

"3. If no candidate then has a majority, from the remaining candidates the one having the least number of votes then to his credit shall be dropped, and the second choice votes cast by the supporters of said dropped candidate shall be added to the votes of the remaining candidates for whom they were cast.

"4. This operation shall be repeated until some candidate has a majority or until only two candidates remain. The one then having the greater number of votes to his credit shall be declared nominated.

"5. No second choice vote shall be counted when it is cast for a candidate whose name shall have been dropped as herein provided."

THE PRESIDENTIAL PRIMARY.

The extension of the principle of the direct primary to permit the voters to express their preference for nominees for President and Vice President of the United States was first made in Oregon. The law was proposed by initiative petition and enacted at the general election of 1910 by the people of that State. The legislatures of six other States enacted similar laws in 1911, so that during the presidential campaign of 1912, prior to the great nominating conventions of the two principal parties, there were vigorous contests to secure the expressed preference of the people for the leading candidates.

No electoral reform in recent years has made more rapid headway, and it is freely predicted that by 1916 enough States will have enacted similar laws to render unnecessary a national nominating convention for the Presidency, as the chief function of those historic bodies will have passed to the people themselves.

The essential features of the laws thus far passed follow:

OREGON.

In presidential years the regular primary for the nomination of State officers is held on the 45th day before the first Monday in June instead of 45 days prior to the general November election as usual. At such election a petition of 1 per cent of the party vote may place upon the ballot as the nominees of the respective party members supporting such candidates.

1. The name of one person each for President and Vice President of the United States.

2. The names of persons as nominees for delegates to the national party convention.

3. The names of nominees for presidential electors.

For President the person having the highest number of votes is held the choice of the party for nomination; same with the Vice President. Delegates to national party conventions are likewise chosen by a plurality vote and their expenses are paid from the State treasury, but not to exceed $200 each. A plurality vote also determines the nomination of presidential electors. Arguments for or against presidential nominees may be printed in the primary election publicity pamphlet at $100 per page.

CALIFORNIA.

On the second Tuesday in May of presidential election years an election is held known as "the May presidential primary election." Voters may express their preference for party candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presidency, and elect delegates to their respective national nominating conventions. One per cent of the party membership in each congressional district is required on petitions to nominate. A plurality vote is considered the preference of the voters. Candidates for delegates to the national conventions are permitted to file statements with the secretary of state that they will, in the convention, support the nominee for the Presidency favored by the rank and file of the party voters. Sample ballots are sent the voters prior to the primary accompanied by a sheet containing biographical sketches of the presidential candidates, at a cost of $200 to those filing such sketch.

NEBRASKA.

The law provides for a "preference vote for President and Vice President of the United States" and the election of delegates to national conventions and members of the national committee of the several parties, to be held at the regular primary held the 45th day before the 1st Monday in June in presidential years. Five hundred party-member signatures on petitions nominate delegates. For presidential nominees the same petitions and regulations apply as now nominate candidates for governor of the State. A plurality vote nominates.

NEW JERSEY.

On the fourth Tuesday of May in each presidential year a special primary election is held to elect delegates to the national party conventions and to permit the voters to express their preference of candidates for the Presidency. Nominating petitions for delegates must be signed by 100 party members. Petitions nominating presidential candidates by 1,000 party members. Pluralities determine the election or nomination. Sample ballots are sent the voters. Opposite the name of each nominee for delegate may be printed at his request the nominee's preference for President.

NORTH DAKOTA.

On the third Tuesday in March of presidential years the voters may at a primary election called for that purpose express their choice for President and Vice President, for delegates to the national party conventions, for presidential electors and for party national committeeman. Five hundred signatures of party voters are sufficient to nominate and place on the ballot. Delegates to national conventions are allowed $200 from State treasury for expenses.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The law in this State is crude. It provides that "party presidential electors and delegates and alternate delegates to national political party conventions shall be chosen at the March primary quadrennially." The secretary of state forwards the vote to the State chairmen of the respective parties, who issue credentials to those receiving the highest number of votes. No provision is made for the preferential ballot on the Presidency, referred to below.

WISCONSIN.

At an election held on the first Tuesday in April of each presidential year delegates to national party conventions are elected and nominations are made for President and Vice President of the United States. Signatures of 1 per cent of the party vote are necessary upon nomination petitions. Candidates receiving the highest number of votes are declared the preference of the voters.

What has rather unfortunately been called the "presidential preference primary" must not be confused with the preferential ballot, treated separately in this issue. The word "preference" in connection with the presidential primary is used to indicate that each voter may indicate whom he prefers as the party candidate. That is about all he can do at that stage, as no State can decide that matter. Each State can only help to decide it, the preferences of each State being brought to the national convention, the final decison there depending on many circumstances.

The preferential ballot is an entirely different thing, as you will see in the article on that subject in this issue. It gives to the voter the opportunity to express his first, second, etc., choices on any ballot on which there are more than two contestants for the same office. The word "preference" should not be used in connection with presidential primaries. The confusion thus introduced will be thus avoided. There is no need of it any more than in any other primaries.

The true preferential ballot, giving the voter the privilege of expressing more than one choice, should be a feature of every presidential primary as well as of every other primary—the Wisconsin State primary, for example—as well as in every final election in which there are more than two contestants for the same office. (See the article on the Preferential Ballot in this issue.)

Now, let us consider a concrete example, showing the need of the preferential ballot in a presidential primary. As we see above, Nebraska has a presidential primary, but not a preferential presidential primary. Last spring the Democrats of Nebraska chose delegates to the Baltimore convention, expressing their choice for President at the same time, which choice was to be determined by a plurality vote. There were two progressive candidates and one conservative candidate for President before the Nebraska Democratic voters. We at once see that this situation gave the one conservative candidate an advantage over the two progressive candidates, as there was danger of the massed conservative votes winning over the divided progressive votes, thus robbing the majority of the Nebraska Democrats of their real choice. The preferential ballot removes this danger, and gives the voters their real choice, without the least injustice to the one conservative candidate. The actual result in Nebraska, if we remember correctly, was somewhat mixed, and there was great anxiety on the part of the progressive voters during the campaign. We urge the extension of the preferential ballot to all presidential primaries as well as to all other primaries and to all elections in which there are more than two contestants.

During the coming winter there will be great activity in the numerous legislatures which will be in session along the line of primaries and presidential primaries. The legislation on these matters should be right—should include the preferential ballot.

THE PREFERENTIAL BALLOT FOR INSURING ELECTION BY A MAJORITY.

If we had our way, very few officials would be elected at the polls by either plurality or majority, for it is only administrative officials that have to be elected by either, and they should not be elected at the polls at all, but should be selected by majority vote of the deliberative body—that is, the legislature of a State or the council of a city.

But, of course, for some time to come many officials will be elected at the polls by either plurality or majority vote. A system of voting therefore that insures a majority instead of a plurality in popular elections is a matter of considerable importance for the present, until all administrative officials are put on the professional basis we advocate for them.

The need of providing for majority elections is evident from the briefest consideration of the recent contest for one of New Jersey's seats in the United States Senate. At the primaries, at which a Democratic candidate for Senator was to be chosen, three prominent progressive Democrats announced themselves as candidates. One day before the expiration of the time in which announcements of candidacies were valid for printing on the official ballot a reactionary Democrat, who had held aloof from the contest until then, announced that he was a candidate also. Here was a situation very dangerous to the progressive cause; if the progressive vote was to be divided among three men and the reactionary vote concentrated on one, the reactionary was likely to get a plurality and win. Under these circumstances two of the progressive Democrats had to withdraw from the race in order to concentrate the progressive vote of the party on one man. This meant heartburning and dissatisfaction, for each of the candidates who was forced to withdraw had no assurance that he was not, in fact, the strongest candidate of the progressive wing of his party.

The whole difficulty would have been avoided by the use of a preferential ballot, such as that in use for the election of the commissioners of Spokane, Wash., or that used in the State primaries of Wisconsin. (For details of the Wisconsin law see Equity for October, 1912, p. 155, sec. 7, where they are printed in full as part of an Arizona act, in which they were incorporated without change. Also see article on The Direct Primary, in this issue.) The two systems differ somewhat, and neither is theoretically perfect, but either is incomparably better than the plurality system.

The application of the Wisconsin system to the New Jersey contest can be illustrated by the use of figures chosen at random. Suppose that if all four candidates had remained in the field; the reactionary would have polled 55,000 votes; the first progressive, 40,000; the second progressive, 30,000; and the third progressive, 25,000. Under the plurality system the reactionary, having a plurality of the votes, would have won.

But suppose the Wisconsin system had been in use. Then each voter would have been allowed to mark on the ballot his second choice as well as his first. And as no candidate received a majority of the first-choice votes the provisions of the law in such a case would have been carried out. The law reads that under such circumstances "the name of the one having the least number of first-choice votes shall be dropped, and the second-choice votes cast by the supporters of the dropped candidate shall be added to the first-choice votes of the remaining candidate for whom they were cast."

Suppose the first and second choice votes cast to be as given in the table below. There the first-choice votes for candidates are indicated by the number opposite names and second-choice votes by the numbers under the names in the second-choice columns. To show how many of any candidate's second-choice votes were on ballots that gave the first choice to any other candidate, the number is put opposite that other candidate's name. Thus of the 4,500 second-choice votes received by the reactionary 1,500 were on ballots that gave the first choice to the first progressive, 2,000 on ballots that gave the first choice to the second progressive, etc.

United States Senator.

First choice.		Second choice.
		Reactionary.	First progressive.	Second progressive.	Third progressive.
Reactionary	55,000	.....	20,000	20,000	15,000
First progressive	40,000	1,500	.....	20,000	18,500
Second progressive	30,000	2,000	25,000	.....	3,000
Third progressive	25,000	1,000	20,000	4,000	.....
Total	150,000	4,500	65,000	44,000	36,500

Under the circumstances represented by this table it is evident that under the old plurality system the reactionary would have won, since he received "the highest number of votes cast" on the office: that is, 55,000 votes would have elected him, although there were 95,000 voters, or a big majority, against him, and he would have owed his election to a divided progressive field.

See, now, how the second-choice system operates, under which a majority, in this case 75,001, is required to elect. No candidate having received a majority of first-choice votes, we proceed with the second operation according to the provisions of the law quoted above. Dropping the third progressive and transferring the ballots on which he was marked first to candidates marked on them as second choice, we have this result:

Reactionary, 55,000 plus 1,000 equals 56,000.
First progressive, 40,000 plus 20,000 equals 60,000.
Second progressive, 30,000 plus 4,000 equals 34,000.

No one having received a majority, we proceed with the next operation. The law reads, "If no candidate then has a majority, from the remaining candidates the one having the least number of votes then to his credit shall be dropped, and the second-choice votes cast by the supporters of said dropped candidate shall be added to the votes of the remaining candidates for whom they were cast."

The second progressive is dropped, and we have the following result:

Reactionary, 56,000 plus 2,000 equals 58,000.
First progressive, 60,000 plus 25,000 equals 85,000.
Result, first progressive is elected.

A little study of the returns will disclose that the reason for the victory of the first progressive lies in the fact that the supporters of the second and third progressives gave their second-choice votes to the first progressive. The preferential system permitted them to vote first for the man of their choice and then to mass the progressive field against the common enemy—the reactionary machine candidate—with the result that the progressive voters, who are in a vast majority, are represented by a progressive Senator.

Thus, we see, for "single-member districts," or where one candidate is to be elected to an office in the district taking part in the election (which applies to the vast majority of our elections), the preferential system would give the office to the real choice of the voters and defeat all plans of politicians to divide the vote opposed to them, while concentrating their own. And it is an additional satisfaction for the voter to express more than a single choice, knowing that if his first choice is defeated perhaps his second or third choice will be victorious.

The Spokane system, which is an improved form of the system well known as that in use for the election of the commissioners of Grand Junction, Colo., would have obviated the difficulty in New Jersey somewhat differently but equally well.

As the special object of this issue of Equity is to explain in an elementary way the several improvements in the mechanism of government for which this periodical stands, we have omitted from this article all technical details. These we hope to give in comprehensive form in an early issue.

THE RECALL.

The State-wide recall was fully treated in October Equity, pages 150–153. Since that issue appeared Nevada, Idaho, and Colorado have voted on constitutional amendments providing for State-wide recall, an analysis of the provisions being given in the above-mentioned article. The recall amendment was carried in Idaho by 36,827 affirmative votes to 14,094 negative. We understand that the recall amendment was carried in Colorado, but figures are not available at this writing; but we have no information concerning Nevada.

THE LOCAL RECALL.

The original recall idea was embodied in the charter of Los Angeles, Cal., in an amendment adopted in 1903, and was, therefore, conceived primarily as an instrument of local government. It spread rapidly to many other California cities, and was later adopted by cities in Oregon and Washington. The circumstances which gave it its greatest vogue was its incorporation with the commission plan of government by cities, especially by Des Moines and Dallas, so that it is now popularly associated with that plan along with the initiative and referendum, although these features are not an integral nor necessary part of the commission plan. Besides the cities under this form, it has been adopted by many other cities in different localities in one form or another. Boston, for example, has a modified system under which the mayor may be recalled, after two years, at the regular election without any preliminary petition. Several States (see October Equity, pp. 150–153) provide in their constitutions for the recall of all elective officials. This, of course, includes the elective officers in cities, counties, and other local divisions.

The form of local recall is essentially the same as that for the State-wide instrument. The number of petitioners required to institute the proceeding would average somewhat larger in the cities than in the State, as the difficulties of obtaining signatures are considerably less in compact communities. Fifteen per cent under the commission-government law of South Dakota and several special charters to 35 per cent in some of the southwestern cities and Idaho are the minimum and maximum. The requirement of the Illinois commission-government law of a 55 per cent petition should, of course, be set down as a practical nullification of the principle.

A more or less standard form of petition and ballot is maintained in nearly all of the cities. The officer sought to be removed is usually given an opportunity to present, in a limited number of words, on the ballot, a statement justifying his course in office, and the recallers are given a similar opportunity to state their case. In the Oakland (Cal.) charter the officer has this privilege in connection with the petition itself. Many of the commission-government laws provide a period of immunity after the beginning of the officer's term in which he can not be recalled. This varies from three months to a year.

The tendency in recently enacted laws is to separate the question of removal from that of the naming of a successor to the official to be removed. That is, the voter is asked to decide in the first instance whether there shall be a recall, and, secondly, if the vote is in favor of such action, who the successor of the officer shall be. This is either accomplished by separating the two propositions on the ballot, or by providing a second election, or some other method of filling the vacancy caused by recall. The Los Angeles city charter has for two years contained a provision by which any appointive officer of the city, as well as an elective one, may be removed by popular election.

THE LOCAL RECALL IN ACTION.

The first use of the recall was in Los Angeles, where a councilman was charged with having favored the liquor interests and having voted to establish an offensive slaughterhouse in his ward. A second election was necessary to accomplish the removal of this officer, the results of the first one having been thrown out by the courts on a technical point. This was in 1904.

Later on in the same city the city council was on the point of giving away a franchise in the bed of the Los Angeles River. Under threat of recall the council rescinded its action.

In 1909 the conduct of the police department of Los Angeles, under Mayor Harper, in relation to vice conditions, was investigated by the grand jury. No indictment was found, but a minority report found him guilty of laxity in the enforcement of the law. On the strength of this a recall petition was secured. Mayor Harper resigned before the date set for the election. The issue then turned upon the choice of a successor. George M. Alexander was elected and is now serving his second term.

In San Bernardino, Cal., in the seven years of its operation the recall has been used once, in which case two councilmen were recalled for letting a public contract to a firm not the lowest bidder.

In Colton, Cal., three members of the board of trustees were recalled because they had voted unauthorized expenditures and had refused to grant liquor licenses.

In Santa Monica, Cal., under threat of the recall an official resigned.

In San Diego, Cal., a councilman managed to delay recall proceedings against him in the courts until the expiration of his term.

In Richmond, Cal., a recall election affected the seats of six councilmen; the incumbents were retained.

In Berkeley, Cal., a recall election was held to recall two school directors because of their action in removing a school superintendent; the incumbents were retained in office.

In Oakland, Cal., a recall was instituted in the summer of 1912 by the Industrial Workers of the World, a labor organization, against the mayor and two commissioners, who were accused of oppression in connection with public street speaking. It so happened that in the interval between this time and the adoption of this charter the women of California had been admitted to the suffrage. It was therefore easy for the leaders of the recall movement to obtain the necessary 15 per cent to the petition which the charter required. The number of petitioners amounted practically to only 7½ per cent of those who had actually voted in the preceding municipal election. The mayor and commissioners were all retained in office.

The people of Seattle, in 1910, recalled the mayor. The charge was made and substantiated that the officer had given aid and comfort to the vice element, and was cooperating with a privately owned electric light company in an attempt to wreck the municipal electric light plant, in order that it might be turned over to the privately owned company. His appointment to the office of chief of police was, however, the leading bone of contention in the campaign. At the election George W. Dilling was chosen to succeed Mayor Gill. An attempt to recall Dilling by the supporters of Gill failed, as the requisite number of signatures were not secured legally. At the election of 1912 George W. Cotterill was elected mayor, having Gill as an opponent. The old political machine, backed by the vice element, after eight months of effort, filed a recall petition against Cotterill. Investigation showed that over 12,000 of these names were fraudulent, and the attempt fell flat. Less than 12,000 valid signatures were secured out of a registration of 85,000 voters. There is no doubt but that the reactionary forces made this move with a clear design to discredit the recall. A citizen of Seattle writes, "Altogether it is a vindication of the recall principle as well as a triumph for civic decency."

In the spring of 1911 Tacoma recalled a mayor and two commissioners on the ground of general inefficiency. The mayor had refused point blank to enforce the civil-service law.

About the same time an unsuccessful effort was made to recall the entire commission in Huron, S. Dak., on a question of financial policy.

In Everett, Wash., a councilman was recalled for his action in regard to a franchise.

In Estacada, Wash., all the elective officials, with the exception of the recorder, were recalled, as it was charged, for gross mismanagement of the people's business.

In Junction City, Oreg., the mayor was recalled by a vote of 4 to 1.

In Dallas, Tex., the recall has been twice invoked and successfully used against the members of the school board. The Dallas charter calls for a 35 per cent petition.

In Des Moines, Iowa, three commissioners conspired to appoint a certain man to the police marshalship in accordance with a preelection bargain. Threat of recall proceedings, however, caused them to drop their scheme and appoint a man to the office who held the public confidence. On another occasion, a police superintendent of that city was visited by a committee representing the gambling interests and threatened with recall unless he agreed to permit the reestablishment of slot machines. He immediately informed the newspapers, and the resulting publicity rendered futile any further talk of the recall.

In Shreveport, La., a commission-governed city, the commissioner of streets was recalled on specific charges of inefficiency and neglect. A second recall campaign, which appears to have been a purely factional matter, resulted in failure.

The mayor of McAlester, Okla., was recalled during April of this year.

The mayor and a commissioner were recalled during 1911 in Wichita, Kans. The facts in the case are much confused.

A school commissioner was recalled in Lawrence, Mass., this fall. He had been convicted of having planted dynamite in a textile strike last winter and fined.

THE JUDICIAL RECALL.

No election for the recall of a judge has yet been held. The only attempt on record was in the case of District Judge Coke, of Roseburg, Oreg., during July, 1911. In presiding over a murder trial which aroused great popular excitement, it was charged that the judge had shown favoritism to the defendant, especially in his charge to the jury, and against the protest of the prosecuting attorney. The friends of the man who was killed started a petition, but were unable to secure one-half of the required 25 per cent of signatures. The prosecutor refused to sign the petition, as he held the fault to be of the head and not the heart. The public took this view of the case, and that the offense was not sufficient to justify a recall election.

[NOTE.—We are indebted to Mr. H. S. Gilbertson, of the Short Ballot Organization, New York City, for compiling most of the above information on the local recall, and he is indebted largely to an article by Dr. John R. Haynes, of Los Angeles, Cal., whom Mr. Gilbertson characterizes as "the originator of the recall."]

EXHIBIT B.

A.

"Republican form of government" within the meaning of Article IV of Federal Constitution is a government in which the people rule, as distinguished from the government in a monarchy or in an oligarchy (aristocracy).

DISCUSSING THE OREGON SYSTEM—INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.

I. FEDERALISTS' STATEMENT IN LETTER NO. 43 IS CONCLUSIVE.

The meaning of "republican form of government," as that term is used in Article IV of the Federal Constitution, is conclusively shown in the Federalists' argument for the adoption of the Constitution. In the series of letters known as The Federalist, addressed to the people of the State of New York, by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay, under the nom de plume Publius, it is said in letter No. 43:

"6. To guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government; to protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened), against domestic violence.

"In a confederacy founded on republican principles and composed of republican members the superintending government ought clearly to possess authority to defend the system against aristocratic or monarchical innovations."

This is in the nature of an admission, for the Federalists were endeavoring to circumscribe the people's power. It follows that, the foregoing statement being an admission, it conclusively shows their attitude, and it has been so considered by text-writers, supreme courts, and the United States Government wherever the point has been squarely considered. Instances will presently be cited.

II. FURTHER PROOF: ORIGIN OF GUARANTY BY UNITED STATES OF REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT FOR THE STATES.

Additional proof as to the meaning of "republican form of government" in Article IV is the origin of the clause. It was the eleventh resolution, offered by Gov. Randolph, of Virginia, and it was considered June 11. Mr. Madison moved an amendment, as follows, and it was adopted:

"The republican constitutions and the existing laws of each State to be guaranteed by the United States." (Elliott's Debates, p. 453.)

Gov. Randolph, in stating why he was for the amendment, said:

"A republican government must be the basis of our National Union, and no State in it ought to have it in its power to change it into a monarchy." (Elliott's Debates, p. 453.)

Immediately after this statement was uttered the resolution was agreed to unanimously. (Elliott's Debates, p. 204.)

Here is a clear-cut statement of the purpose of the guaranty, unanimously agreed to, and later, when the Constitution was being considered before the entire country, three of the most noted Federalists, Hamilton, Madison, and Jay, expressly admitted in letter No. 43 that such is the aim of the guaranty.

A few years after the adoption of the Constitution Mr. Justice Wilson, of the United States Supreme Court, who had participated in the framing of the Constitution, declared as follows in Chisholm v. Georgia (2 Dall., 419):

"As a citizen I know the government of that State (Georgia) to be republican, and my short definition of such a government is one constructed on this principle, that the supreme power resides in the body of the people."

But it is the Federalists' admission in letter No. 43 that is conclusive. It is so considered by text-writers, supreme courts, and the United States Government:

III. STATEMENT IN LETTER NO. 43 IS ACCEPTED BY TEXT-WRITERS, SUPREME COURTS, AND THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

In Commentaries on Constitution of the United States by Mr. Justice Story, in the chapter elucidating Article IV, section 4, he says:

"The Federalist has spoken with so much force and propriety upon this subject that it supersedes all further reasoning. 'In a confederacy,' says that book, 'founded on republican principles and composed of republican members, the superintending government ought clearly to possess authority to defend the system against aristocratic or monarchical innovations.'" (Constitution of the United States, by Story, sec. 1815.)

In Cooley's Constitutional Limitations it is said:

"The last provisions that we shall here notice are that the United States shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government, and that no State shall grant any title of nobility. The purpose of these is to protect a Union founded on republican principles and composed entirely of republican members against aristocratic and monarchical innovations."

Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (7th ed., p. 28) citing the Federalist, Nos. 43 and 44 (probably No. 21 is meant rather than 44), it is said:

"It does not fall within our province to discuss these provisions. They have been much discussed in Congress within a few years, but in a party rather than a judicial spirit." (See Story on Constitution, 4th ed., ch. 41; Luther v. Borden, 7 How., 1; Texas v. White, 7 Wall., 700; Cooley, Constitutional Principles, ch. 11.)

In Hopkins v. Duluth (81 Minn., 189; 83 N. W. Rep., 536) the court cited the foregoing statement in Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, and said:

"We apprehend that a little reflection must satisfy anyone that the advantages of providing local self-government by the voters directly interested through a 'referendum' is abstractly as well as concretely more republican than through representatives of the people in the legislatures, many of whom are not at all interested in the affairs of the given locality."

In the general election in 1896 the people of South Dakota, through a direct vote at the polls, adopted a constitutional amendment taking to themselves an option to veto acts of the legislature (the optional referendum, usually termed the referendum) and a power to directly legislate should their representatives fail to represent them (the popular initiative, commonly known as the initiative). In South Dakota the governor has no power to veto "measures referred to a vote of the people."

Later, when South Dakota's Senators and Representatives appeared in Congress to take the oath of office, there was no opposition to their being seated. Thus for 13 years the Representatives of South Dakota have been Members of Congress without opposition.

What this means is definitely set forth by the United States Supreme Court in Luther v. Borden et al. (7 How., U. S., 1, 421), decided in 1849:

"When the Senators and Representatives of a State are admitted into the councils of the Union the authority of the government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority. And its decision is binding on every other department of the Government and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal."

This decision by the United States Supreme Court has been followed in Texas v. White (7 Wall., U. S., 700, 731), in 1868; also in Taylor and Marshall v. Beckham (178 U. S., 548) in 1900.

In Oregon at the June election of 1902 the people of the State, through a direct vote, installed the initiative and referendum in combination with the legislature, and from that time to the present day Oregon's Senators and Representatives have been seated in Congress without opposition.

In this court, in Kadderly v. City of Portland, decided in 1903, the initiative was held to be a republican form of government. Speaking for the court, Mr. Justice Bean said:

"Nor do we think the amendment void because in conflict with section 4, Article IV, of the Constitution of the United States, guaranteeing to every State a republican form of government. The purpose of this provision of the Constitution is to protect the people of the several States against aristocratic and monarchial innovations, and against insurrections and domestic violence, and to prevent them from abolishing a republican form of government." (Cooley Const. Lim., 7th ed., 45; 2 Story Const., 5th ed., sec. 1815; 44 Oreg., 118, 144; s. c., 74 Pacific Rep., 711, 719.)

In 1906 the people of Montana by direct vote installed the initiative and referendum, and in this system the governor is expressly prohibited from vetoing measures "referred to the people by initiative referendum petitions." Later the State's Senators and Representatives were seated in Congress without opposition.

Thus in a third State the initiative system has been passed upon by Congress.

Next, Oklahoma was admitted. Oklahoma's initiative system provides that "the veto power of the governor shall not extend to measures voted on by the people." (Attorney general's brief, p. 27.)

The enabling act under which the State was admitted provides that the constitution adopted by the people shall be a republican form of government, and to the President of the United States is delegated power to decide the question. When the constitution was presented to the President, parties appeared claiming that the initiative and referendum are not a republican form of government, but the President, with the advice of the Attorney General, Charles J. Bonaparte, admitted the State. In his proclamation he says:

"Whereas it appears the said constitution and government of the proposed State of Oklahoma are republican in form," etc.

The President does not state his reasons for declaring the initiative and referendum to be a republican form of government, nor did the Attorney General present a written opinion, but in a letter dated December 17, 1907, to Delegate A. L. Deuel, in the Michigan constitutional convention, the Attorney General says:

"I am in receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, in reference to the initiative and referendum clause in the constitution of Oklahoma. The question of whether the Oklahoma constitution was in accordance with the provisions of the enabling act was very carefully considered by the Department of Justice, but all communications on the subject were made verbally by the Attorney General to the President. Under these circumstances it is, of course, inappropriate for me to attempt to advise you as to the view taken of any specific provision. I can only refer you to the fact, now a matter of common knowledge, that in accordance with the provisions of the enabling act the admission of the State into the Union was proclaimed." (Equity Series, April, 1908, p. 40.)

There are two valid reasons for the Attorney General's decision, one being that the Congress had passed upon the general proposition by seating the Senators and Representatives from South Dakota, Oregon, and Montana, and the other is the statement in letter No. 43 in the Federalist. We urged both of these points when the case was under consideration.

The constitutionality of Oklahoma's constitution was favorably passed upon by the Oklahoma Supreme Court April 27, 1908. The case is Ex parte Wagner, 95 Pacific Reporter, 434.

The foregoing cases are believed to be the only ones where the constitutionality of the initiative has been passed upon by the United States Government or a supreme court.

SUMMARY.

Reviewing the foregoing history, it must seem quite clear that the Federal guaranty of a "republican form of government" is a guaranty against aristocratic or monarchical innovations.

IV. STILL FURTHER PROOFS: CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH THE CONSTITUTION OF 1787 WAS FRAMED AND ADOPTED.

Still further proofs are the conditions under which the Constitution of 1787 was framed and adopted.

The Declaration of Independence was issued and the Revolutionary War was successfully fought under a system of government in which the people ruled.

In New England they ruled through direct legislation in local affairs, with the local administrative officials directly elected. In State affairs the people ruled through a legislative assembly, directly elected, and each member was subject to instructions. Instructions were given at town meetings. Special town meetings could be called by the selectmen or by any 10 citizens. Most of the administrative State officials were directly elected.

In the Commonwealths other than New England legislation within the State was by a legislative assembly and by county governments. In both of them the members were subject to instructions. Instructions were given at county conferences (mass meetings). Most of the administrative State officials were directly elected.

In national affairs the people ruled through a Congress whose Members were elected by the legislatures. These Members were subject to recall and could be instructed.

Thus the people ruled, and they secured their freedom.

Following are excerpts from the State constitutions of that era:

The North Carolina bill of rights of 1776 declares:

"1. That all political power is vested in and derived from the people only."

The Virginia bill of rights of 1776 declares:

"SECTION 1. That all men are by nature equally free and independent, and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they can not, by any compact, deprive or divest their posterity, namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

"SEC. 2. That all power is vested in and consequently derived from the people."

The Maryland bill of rights of 1776 says:

"I. That all government of right originates from the people, is founded in compact only, and instituted solely for the good of the whole."

The Pennsylvania bill of rights of 1776 declares:

"III. That the people of this State have the sole, exclusive, and inherent right of governing and regulating the internal police of the same."

The New York bill of rights of 1777 declares:

"I. This convention, therefore, in the name and by the authority of the good people of this state, doth ordain, determine, and declare that no authority shall, on any pretense whatever, be exercised over the people or members of this State but such as shall be derived from and granted by them."

The Connecticut constitution of 1777 declares:

"That the ancient form of civil government, contained in the charter from Charles the Second, King of England, and adopted by the people of this State, shall be and remain the civil constitution of this State, under the sole authority of the people thereof, independent of any king or prince whatever. And that this republic is, and shall forever be and remain, a free, sovereign, and independent State, by the name of the State of Connecticut."

In Rhode Island, by act of May 4, 1776, the general assembly transformed the colony to a Commonwealth (History of the American People, by Prof. Francis N. Thorpe, p. 177). The sovereignty passed to the people.

The first constitution submitted in Massachusetts was rejected by the people by direct vote at town meetings in the spring of 1779, because it contained no bill of rights and for other reasons. The next constitution submitted, that of 1780, the people adopted by direct vote at town meetings and by more than two-thirds of all who voted. The bill of rights declares:

"ARTICLE I. All men are born free and equal and have certain natural, essential, and inalienable rights, among which may be reckoned the right of enjoying and defending their lives and liberties; that of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property; in fine, that of seeking and obtaining their safety and happiness.

"ART. IV. The people of this Commonwealth have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State, and do and forever shall exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right which is not or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled."

In New Hampshire four constitutions were submitted to the people who voted directly upon them at town meetings. The first three were rejected (American Political Science Review, vol. 2, p. 549) largely because there were no express limitations upon the power of the legislature—no bill of rights. The bill of rights of the fourth one, that of 1748, declares:

"VII. The people of this State have the sole and exclusive right of governing themselves as a free, sovereign, and independent State and do and forever hereafter shall exercise and enjoy every power, jurisdiction, and right pertaining thereto which is not or may not hereafter be by them expressly delegated to the United States of America in Congress assembled."

The Vermont constitution of 1777 declares:

"IV. That the people of this State have the sole, exclusive, and inherent rigat of governing and regulating the internal police of the same."

The New Jersey constitution of 1776 declares:

"Whereas all the constitutional authority ever possessed by the kings of Great Britain over these Colonies or their other dominions was, by compact, derived from the people and held of them for the common interest of the whole society. Allegiance and protection are, in the nature of things, reciprocal ties, each equally depending upon the other and liable to be dissolved by the others being refused or withdrawn. And whereas George the Third, King of Great Britain, has refused protection to the good people of these Colonies and by assenting to sundry acts of the British Parliament attempted to subject them to the absolute dominion of that body, and has also made war upon them in the most cruel and unnatural manner for no other cause than asserting their just rights, all civil authority under him is necessarily at an end, and a dissolution of government in each Colony has consequently taken place.

* * * * * * *

"IV. That all inhabitants of this Colony of full age who are worth £50 proclamation money, clear estate in the same, and have resided within the county in which they claim a vote for 12 months immediately preceding the election shall be entitled to vote for representatives in council and assembly, and also for all other public officers that shall be elected by the people of the country at large."

The Delaware constitution of 1776 provides:

"The right of suffrage in the election of members of both houses shall remain as exercised by law at present." (Part of article 5.)

The South Carolina constitution of 1776 declares:

"I. That this congress, being a full and free representation of the people of this Colony, shall henceforth be deemed and called the General Assembly of South Carolina, and as such shall continue until the 21st day of October next, and no longer."

The Georgia constitution of 1777 declares:

"We therefore, the representatives of the people, from whom all power originates, and for whose benefit all government is intended, by virtue of the power delegated to us, do ordain and declare, and it is hereby ordained and declared, that the following rules and regulations be adopted for the future government of this State."

Reviewing the foregoing, it is clear that in each of the 13 State governments of the Revolutionary era the written constitutions declared that the people were the ruling power, as distinguished from the rule of a single individual (monarchy) or of less than a majority (an oligarchy or aristocracy). This was a distinguishing feature of the American State governments, and it is the feature referred to in the Federal guaranty to maintain a "republican form of government."

With the close of the Revolutionary War and the resumption of foreign trade the General Government was thoroughly inadequate. It was a Government in which each State levied its own import duties and discriminated against the adjoining States. These and other defects led to the calling of a national constitutional convention which met at Philadelphia in May, 1787.

To get something of an adequate idea of the conditions under which the delegates to the convention were elected and to realize the nature of the contest in the convention one should know the following facts:

Through the State governments special privileges in various forms had been terminated; that is—

Entails and primogeniture had been abolished, thus restoring equal rights in the family and between families.

Equal rights between churches had been established. In other words, the union between church and state had been disestablished.

Equal rights to an education had been established. Stated differently, taxation for the maintenance of free public schools had been installed.

These changes were wrought in each of the thirteen States.

In Virginia, Jefferson was the leading spirit. After the issuance of the Declaration of Independence he was elected to the legislature and in October was introducing bills. In his autobiography, written after his retirement from the Presidency of the Republic, he speaks of the bills whereby the above-described reforms in Virginia were secured, and said:

"I considered four of these bills [of the Revised Code of Virginia] passed or reported as forming a system by which every fiber would be eradicated of ancient or future aristocracy, and a foundation laid for a government truly republican; and all this would be effected without the violation of a single natural right of any one individual citizen." (Autobiography, vol. 1, p. 49.)

These great changes from special privilege to equal rights were effected in the face of strong opposition. It was not until 1786 that the state and the church were disestablished in Virginia. (Life of Thomas Jefferson, by Morse, p. 21.)

The effect of terminating entails and primogeniture is described as follows in "Thomas Jefferson," by John T. Morse, page 39:

"That distinguished class, whose existence as a social caste had been forever destroyed, reviled the destroyer [Thomas Jefferson] from this time forth with relentless animosity; and, even to the second and third generations, the descendants of many of these patrician families vindictively cursed the statesman who had placed them on a level with the rest of their countrymen."

Also, at this time, 1787, other conditions were present to impel the former Tories, the creditor class, and various other propertied interests to combine to form a government that should terminate the people's power. For five years falling prices and hard times had afflicted the country. Huge debts existed, public and private, and, owing to the great scarcity of money and the consequent low prices for property, large numbers of the people were unable to pay their taxes, and mortgages were foreclosed at less than half the former selling prices. In Massachusetts, at two different times, the people forced the courts to adjourn and thus stop the foreclosure of mortgages while they petitioned the legislature for stay laws and other forms of relief. For one year debts were made payable in live stock and farm products. In New Hampshire a proposition to issue an additional volume of paper money was put to a vote of the people at town meetings and it was defeated. In Rhode Island large quantities of paper money were issued. At the time of the constitutional convention of 1787 a rebellion in Massachusetts (Shay's rebellion) had just been put down.

The call for the election of delegates to the National Constitutional Convention was issued in 1786 and of the delegates chosen by the legislature nearly all were reactionists. "Conservatives" is a less offensive term and is the one used by most historians. In the words of Alexander Johnston, of Princeton University:

"They [the framers of the Constitution] represented the conservative intelligence of the country very exactly; from this class there is hardly a name, except that of Jay, which could be suggested to complete the list." (Article on the convention of 1787 in Lalor's Cyclopedia of Political Science and United States History.)

Proof that the vast majority of delegates in the convention were reactionists are the following facts:

Of the 56 men who had signed the Declaration of Independence only 11 years before only 6 were chosen as delegates to the constitutional convention. The people's leaders, such as Samuel Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry, Thomas Paine, and others, were not elected.

When the convention met "the doors were closed to the public and the utmost secrecy maintained with regard to the proceedings. Members were not allowed to communicate with anyone outside of that body concerning the matters therein discussed, nor were they permitted, except by a vote of the convention, to copy anything from the journals." (The Spirit of American Government, by Prof. J. Allen Smith, State of Washington University, p. 34.)

Prof. John Fiske in the "Critical Period of American History," says (p. 231):

"The wildest speculations and rumors were current. A few hoped, and many feared, that some scheme of monarchy would be established. Such surmises found their way across the ocean, and hopes were expressed in England that should a king be chosen, it might be a younger son of George III. It was even hinted, with alarm, that, through gratitude to our recent allies, we might be persuaded to offer the crown to some member of the royal family of France."

What actually took place within the convention is described as follows by Delegate Luther Martin, attorney general of Maryland, in his report to the legislature:

"One party, whose object and wish it was to abolish and annihilate all State governments, and to bring forward one general government over this extensive continent, of a monarchical nature, under certain restrictions and limitations. Those who openly avowed this sentiment were, it is true, but few; yet it is equally true, sir, that there was a considerable number who did not openly avow it, who were by myself and many others of the convention considered as being in reality favorers of that sentiment; and, acting upon those principles, covertly endeavoring to carry into effect what they well knew openly and avowedly could not be accomplished.

"The second party was not for the abolition of the State governments, nor for the introduction of a monarchical government under any form; but they wished to establish such a system as could give their own States undue power and influence in the government over the other States.

"A third party was what I considered truly federal and republican; this party was nearly equal in number with the other two. * * *

"But, sirs, the favorers of monarchy and those who wished the total abolition of State governments, well knowing that a government founded on truly federal principles, the basis of which were the thirteen State governments, preserved in full force and energy, would be destructive of their views; and knowing they were too weak in numbers openly to bring forward their system, conscious also that the people of America would reject it if proposed to them, joined their interest with that party, who wished a system, giving particular States the power and influence over the others, procuring in return mutual sacrifices from them, in giving the government great and undefined powers as to its legislative and executive; well knowing that by departing from a federal system they paved the way for their favorite object, the destruction of the State governments and the introduction of monarchy." (Secret proceedings and debates of the convention of 1787, p. 15; 1 Elliott's Debates, pp. 388, 389.)

Following is direct proof to sustain the foregoing claim that an influential portion of the convention aimed to abolish State governments and establish a central government monarchical in nature.

ALEXANDER HAMILTON'S PLAN OF GOVERNMENT.

Alexander Hamilton worked for a system of government founded on legal privileges, and he advocated the election of a President for life. He advocated such a system because he firmly disbelieved in the people's power to govern themselves. This was his mental make-up, for he was not a Teuton. "His mother was of French Hugenot descent" and "his father immigrated from Scotland." (The American Cyclopædia, title "Alexander Hamilton.")

It has been the Teutonic people who have reached the higher stages of self-government. This people have possessed a spirit of liberty and other qualities that have resulted in an orderly self-government far superior to that which prevailed in the Roman Republic, or in later days among the French people, who are partly Teutonic.

Alexander Hamilton's plan of government, though not published to the American people for 30 years, was known to his fellow delegates. Hamilton's ideas were that the British system of legal privileges should be established. He said:

"I believe the British Government forms the best model the world ever produced, and such has been its progress in the minds of many, that this truth gradually gains ground. This Government has for its object public strength and individual security. It is said with us to be unattainable. If it was once formed it would maintain itself.

"All communities divide themselves into the few and the many. The first are the rich and well born, the other the mass of the people. The voice of the people has been said to be the voice of God; and however generally this maxim has been quoted and believed, it is not true in fact. The people are turbulent and changing; they seldom judge or determine right. Give, therefore, to the first class a distinct, permanent share in the Government. They will check the unsteadiness of the second, and, as they can not receive any advantage by a change, they therefore will ever maintain good government. Can a democratic assembly, who annually revolve in the mass of the people, be supposed steadily to pursue the public good? Nothing but a permanent body can check the imprudence of democracy. Their turbulent and uncontrolling disposition requires checks. The Senate of New York, although chosen for four years, we have found to be inefficient. Will, on the Virginia plan, a continuance of seven years do it? It is admitted that you can not have a good executive upon a democratic plan. See the excellency of the British Executive. He is placed above temptation. He can have no distinct interests from the public welfare. Nothing short of such an executive can be efficient. The weak side of a republican government is in danger of foreign influence. This is unavoidable, unless it is so constructed as to bring forward its first characters in its support. I am, therefore, for a general government, yet would wish to go the full length of republican principles.

"Let one body of the legislature be constituted during good behavior or life.

"Let one executive be appointed who dares execute his powers.

"It may be asked, Is this a republican system? It is strictly so, as long as they remain elective.

"And let me observe, that an executive is less dangerous to the liberties of the people when in office during life, than for seven years.

"It may be said, this constitutes an elective monarchy? Pray what is a monarchy? May not the governors of the respective States be considered in that light? But by making the executive subject to impeachment, the term monarchy can not apply.

"These elective monarchs have produced tumults in Rome, and are equally dangerous to peace in Poland; but this can not apply to the mode in which I would propose the election. Let electors be appointed in each of the States to elect the executive (here Mr. H. produced his plan, a copy whereof is hereunto annexed), to consist of two branches; and I would give them the unlimited power of passing all laws, without exception. The assembly to be elected for three years, by the people, in districts. The Senate to be elected by the electors, to be chosen for that purpose by the people, and to remain in office during life. The executive to have the power of negativing all laws; to make war or peace, with the advice of the Senate; to make treaties with their advice; but to have the sole direction of all military operations, and to send ambassadors, and appoint all military officers; and to pardon all offenders, treason excepted, unless by advice of the Senate. On his death or removal, the President of the Senate to officiate, with the same powers until another is elected. Supreme judicial officers to be appointed by the Executive and the Senate. The legislature to appoint courts in each State, so as to make the State governments unnecessary to it.

"All State laws to be absolutely void, which contravene the general laws. An officer to be appointed in each State, to have a negative on all State laws. All the militia, and the appointment of officers, to be under the National Government.

"I confess that this plan and that from Virginia are very remote from the idea of the people. Perhaps the Jersey plan is nearest their expectation. But the people are gradually ripening in their opinions of government; they begin to be tired of an excess of democracy; and what even is the Virginia plan, but 'pork still, with a little change of the sauce.'" (Secret Proceedings and Debates of the Convention, 1787, pp. 144–147; also see Elliott's Debates.)

THE MIGHTY CONTEST OF 1787: THE PEOPLE'S RULE VERSUS THE RULE OF THE FEW.

Something of an idea of the fierce contest that prevailed at this time can be gathered from the following utterances.

Delegate Martin in his address to the Maryland Legislature concluded with these words:

"I would cheerfully resign the appointment I now hold; I would bind myself never to accept another, either under the General Government or that of my own State. I would do more, sirs, so destructive do I consider the present system to the happiness of my country, I would cheerfully sacrifice that share of property with which Heaven has blessed a life of industry; I would reduce myself to indigence and poverty, and those who are dearer to me than my own existence I would trust to the care and protection of that Providence, which hath so kindly protected myself, if on those terms only I could procure my country to reject those chains which are forged for it." (Secret Proceedings and Debates of the Convention of 1787, p. 97; 1 Elliott's Debates, p. 429.)

In a debate before the Virginia convention Patrick Henry said:

"Among other deformities, there is an awful squinting. It squints towards a monarchy." (Elliott's Debates, vol. 3, p. 58.)

Richard Henry Lee, in a letter to Gov. Randolph, said:

"It can not be denied with truth that this new constitution is in first principles highly and dangerously oligarchic, and it is a point agreed that a government of the few is of all governments the worst."

The plan of the Federalists was partially thwarted by the Massachusetts plan:

PEOPLE'S RULE PRESERVED THROUGH MASSACHUSETTS PLAN.

The Massachusetts State convention, which for several weeks had refused to adopt the government proposed by the Federalists, finally reached an agreement with some of them whereby the convention ratified the proposed constitution and then requested that the First Congress should submit constitutional amendments limiting the powers of the Federal Government. This was in pursuance of a "gentleman's agreement" that amendments would be submitted.

Other State conventions adopted the plan, and thus the Federal Government was established, after which the agreement for a bill of rights was carried out, as is evidenced by amendments 1 to 10.

That is how the State governments and other rights were preserved. Eight years later Washington refused to accept more than one reelection, and that prevented the establishment of life tenure for the head of the Government. Then in 1800 the people ousted the Federalist organization, and it was completely annihilated by 1824. This prevented the reestablishment of special privileges—an aristocracy of wealth and the reelection of the President for term after term.

MEANING OF REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

With the foregoing for a background, let us consider the description of a "republican form of government," as actually put forth to the American people in 1787 by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay in defense of the government they proposed.

The preamble to the proposed system says: "We, the people of the United States," and then there is a complete delegation of certain powers of government:

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

The Senators were to be chosen by the legislatures, to hold office for six years.

The head of the Government was to be chosen by presidential electors, who should be chosen by legislatures, or in such manner as they should provide, and he was to be chosen for four years, with a right to succeed himself.

And the Senators and President thus chosen were to select the few men in the Supreme Court, who were to hold office during good behavior (for life), though in 1787 it was not hinted that these judges should possess the power to nullify an act of a legislature or of Congress.

Thus the power to rule the country was to be delegated to the few men in office, for there was no bill of rights, whereas ever since the granting of Magna Charta all Anglo-Saxons had possessed such a protection.

The Federalists squarely faced the issue. In letter No. 39, addressed to "The People of the State of New York," it is said:

"If the plan of the convention, therefore, be found to depart from the republican character, its advocates must abandon it as no longer defensible.

"What, then, are the distinctive characters of the republican form? Were an answer to this question to be sought, not by recurring to principles but in the application of the term by political writers to the constitutions of different States, no satisfactory one would ever be found. Holland, in which no particle of the supreme authority is derived from the people, has passed almost universally under the denomination of a republic. The same title has been bestowed on Venice, where absolute power over the great body of the people is exercised in the most absolute manner by a small body of hereditary nobles. Poland, which is a mixture of aristocracy and of monarchy in their worst forms, has been dignified with the same appellation. The Government of England, which has one republican branch only, combined with an hereditary aristocracy and monarchy, has, with equal impropriety, been frequently placed on the list of republics. These examples, which are nearly as dissimilar to each other as to a genuine republic, show the extreme inaccuracy with which the term has been used in political disquisitions.

"If we resort for a criterion to the different principles on which different forms of government are established, we may define a republic to be, or at least may bestow that name on, a government which derives all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people, and is administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behavior.

"It is essential to such a government that it be derived from the great body of the society, not from an inconsiderable proportion, or a favored class of it; otherwise a handful of tyrannical nobles, exercising their oppressions by a delegation of their powers, might aspire to the rank of republicans, and claim for their government the honorable title of republic.

"It is sufficient for such a government that the persons administering it be appointed, either directly or indirectly, by the people, and that they hold their appointments by either of the tenures just specified; otherwise every government in the United States, as well as every other popular government that has been or can be well organized or well executed, would be degraded from the republican character. According to the constitution of every State in the Union, some one or other of the officers of government are appointed indirectly only by the people. According to most of them, the chief magistrate himself is so appointed. And according to one, this mode of appointment is extended to one of the coordinate branches of the legislature. According to all the constitutions, also, the tenure of the highest offices is extended to a definite period, and in many instances, both within the legislative and executive departments, to a period of years, according to the provisions of most of the constitutions, again, as well as according to the most respectable and received opinions on the subject, the members of the judiciary department are to retain their offices by the firm tenure of good behavior.

"On comparing the constitution planned by the convention with the standard here fixed, we perceive at once that it is, in the most rigid sense, conformable to it." (The Federalist, pp. 232–234, Lodge's ed.)

In the foregoing the aim is to show that the proposed system of Federal Government is sufficiently popular to be classed as a republican form of government, as distinguished from a government in which the few are the ruling power—an aristocracy or oligarchy.

This is consistent with Madison's statement in Letter No. 43 (p. 9 above), namely, that a republican form of government is one that is distinguishable from a government that is "aristocratic or monarchial." In other words, a republican form of government is a government through which the people rule, as distinguished from a government in which the ruling power is in less than a majority.

To fully realize that this is Madison's meaning one should recall that in Letter No. 39 the aim is to demonstrate that there is sufficient control in the people to characterize the Government as republican.

It follows that had the Federal Government provided for more power in the people it would have been more republican. For example, had there been a provision that the public officials—executive, judicial, and legislative—were to be directly chosen. In such case, without question, the Government would have been republican in form.

It also is to be inferred that had there been an express provision that the Members of the House and of the Senate should be subject to instructions by the people it would have been a republican form of government. In determining whether or not a government is republican in form the only point involved is, Do the people rule?

DIRECT LEGISLATION IN COMBINATION WITH REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT A REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

A further corollary is that had the people reserved to themselves the right to directly enact laws whenever their legislative representatives should refuse, it unquestionably would have been a republican form of government, for throughout New England at that time the people were legislating directly, and it was admittedly a republican form of government, for in Letter No. 43, by the Federalist, it is said:

"But the authority (of the United States) extends no further than to a guaranty of a republican form of government, which supposes a preexisting government of the form which is to be guaranteed. As long, therefore, as the existing republican forms are continued by the States, they are guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. Whenever the States may choose to substitute other republican forms, they have a right to do so, and to claim the Federal guaranty for the latter. The only restriction imposed on them is that they shall not exchange republican for antirepublican constitutions, a restriction which, it is presumed, will hardly be considered a grievance."

CONCLUSIVE PROOF.

The foregoing is conclusive proof that the State governments of 1787 are the standards whereby a republican form of government, within the meaning of Article IV, is to be determined; and it is an unquestioned fact that throughout New England at that time the people were legislating directly. It follows, then, that direct legislation in combination with representative government was a republican form of government in 1787, and so it is to-day.

It follows that defendant must meet with an adverse decision by this court.

The positive proof above set forth is in addition to the express admission by the Federalist in Letter No. 43 that the aim of the guaranty by the United States is to defend the State systems "against aristocratic or monarchical innovations."

AUTHORITIES.

The fact that in New England in 1787 the people legislated directly in combination with representative government is mentioned by the California Supreme Court, and is relied upon to uphold the constitutionality of direct legislation in municipal affairs in combination with representative government. The case is In re Pfahler (150 Cal., 71; 88 Pac. Rep., 270, 273), and the question decided by the court is, Is a city ordinance enacted through the initiative unconstitutional on the ground that the system is an unrepublican form of government?

The court referred to the well-known fact that at the time the Federal Constitution was adopted the town meeting system of legislating by direct ballot prevailed, and said:

"If the people may legislate directly in a town meeting, they may do so by their votes at the polls."

To the same effect is Hopkins v. Duluth (81 Minn., 189) quoted at page 11 above.

FURTHER PROOF.

In addition to voting directly at town meetings in New England, the constitutions of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Georgia provided that the people should directly determine whether a constitutional convention should be called to frame amendments, and the New Hampshire constitution provided that the constitution should not be changed except through direct legislation—direct vote of the people.

These constitutional provisions are as follows. The Massachusetts constitution declares:

"In order the more effectually to adhere to the principles of the constitution and to correct those violations which by any means may be made therein, as well as to form such alterations as from experience shall be found necessary, the general court which shall meet in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ninety-five shall issue precepts to the selectmen of the several towns and to the assessors of the unincorporated plantations directing them to convene the qualified voters of their respective towns and plantations for the purpose of collecting their sentiments on the necessity or expediency of revising the constitution.

"And if it shall appear by the returns made that two-thirds of the qualified voters throughout the State, who shall assemble and vote in consequence of the said precepts, are in favor of such revision or amendment, the general court shall issue precepts, or direct them to be issued from the secretary's office, to the several towns to elect delegates to meet in convention for the purpose aforesaid.

"And said delegates to be chosen in the same manner and proportion as their representatives in the second branch of the legislature are by this constitution to be chosen." (Massachusetts' Constitution, 1780–1908, chap. 6, art. 10.)

The New Hampshire constitution of 1784 to 1792 declares:

"To preserve an effectual adherence to the principles of the constitution, and to correct any violations thereof, as well as to make such alterations therein, as from experience may be found necessary, the general court shall at the expiration of seven years from the time this constitution shall take effect [1791], issue precepts, or direct them to be issued from the secretary's office, to the several towns and incorporated places, to elect delegates to meet in convention for the purposes aforesaid; the said delegates to be chosen in the same manner, and proportioned as the representatives to the general assembly; provided that no alteration shall be made in this constitution before the same shall be laid before the towns and unincorporated places and approved by two-thirds of the qualified voters present and voting upon the question."

The Georgia constitution of 1777, in force until 1789, provides in article 63:

"No alteration shall be made in this constitution without petitions from a majority of the counties, and the petitions from each county to be signed by a majority of voters in each county within this State, at which time the assembly shall order a convention to be called for that purpose, specifying the alterations to be made according to the petitions preferred to the assembly by the majority of the counties as aforesaid."

These provisions for direct action by the people, as distinguished from government through elected representatives, are in addition to direct legislation in local affairs in New England.

Later, after party government was established in the Nation and when it had degenerated into machine rule (the rule of the few), about 1836 to 1844, people partially protected themselves in State affairs by securing constitutional conventions, in which they framed limitations upon the power of the State "machine" by providing in some cases that State bonds should not be issued except where approved by a direct vote of the people or in case of war, and that paper money should not be issued by corporations chartered by the State "machine" except where approved by direct vote of the people.

It was thus that the excessive creation and repudiation of State debts was terminated, and that the issuance of "wild cat" and "bob-tail" paper money was abolished. For example, the Rhode Island constitution of 1842, article 4, section 13, says:

"The general assembly shall have no power hereafter, without the express consent of the people, to incur State debts to an amount exceeding $50,000, except in time of war or in case of insurrection or invasion, nor shall they in any case, without such consent, pledge the faith of the State for the payment of the obligation of others."

Michigan followed the next year (1843) with a similar change in her constitution. A year later New Jersey did likewise. Two years later Iowa and New York placed similar provisions in their constitutions. Many other States have adopted the system.

The Iowa constitution of 1846, article 8, sections 5 and 6, declares:

"No act of the general assembly authorizing or creating corporations or associations with banking powers, nor amendments thereto, shall take effect or in any manner be in force until the same shall have been submitted separately to the people at a general or special election as provided by law, to be held not less than three months after the passage of the act, and shall have been approved by a majority of all the electors voting for and against it at such election.

"Subject to the provisions of the foregoing section, the general assembly may also provide for the establishment of a State bank with branches."

Of the special privilege corporations whose powers were thus curbed not one of them ever applied to a supreme court asking that it abolish the people's protection by declaring the system to be unrepublican.

The voters in Pennsylvania were the first to successfully attack the rule of the few. A constitutional convention was secured in 1838. Four years later the voters of Rhode Island were successful, as were those of New Jersey in another two years, 1844, and of New York in 1846, with the voters of Illinois triumphant at the end of another two years. Victories in other States followed in rapid succession. Virginia, Michigan, and Kentucky in 1850 and Ohio, Indiana, and Maryland the next year.

Not until after the war of 1860–1865 did the business men and farmers rise en masse against the railway monopolies. This was termed the granger uprising, because the newly formed granges were the organizations through which the sentiment of the oppressed found voice. A constitutional convention was secured in Illinois in 1870 and three years later in Pennsylvania. In Illinois the next legislature enacted a drastic railway law.

What followed is described as follows by President Hadley, of Yale University, in his book on Railroad Transportation:

"This law was pronounced unconstitutional by Judge Lawrence. The result was that he immediately afterwards failed of reelection on this ground. The defeat of Judge Lawrence showed the true significance of the farmers' movement. They were concerned in securing what they felt to be their rights, and they were unwilling that any constitutional barriers should be made to defeat the popular will. They had reached the point where they regarded many of the forms of law as mere technicalities. They were dangerously near the point where revolutions begin.

"But they did not pass the point. The law of 1873 avoided the issue raised by Judge Lawrence against that of 1871. Instead of directly fixing maximum rates, it provided that rates must be reasonable, and then further provided for a commission to fix reasonable rates. Similar laws were passed by Iowa and Minnesota almost immediately afterwards. The Legislature of Wisconsin went even further, fixing, by the so-called Potter law, the rates on different classes of goods at figures which were quite unremunerative. The railroads made vain attempts to contest these regulations in courts. They were defeated again and again, and, finally, in 1877, the Supreme Court of the United States sustained the constitutionality of the granger laws." (Hadley on Railroad Transportation, 133–135.)

Thus in State affairs the people have been able to protect themselves. It has been comparatively easy to secure the submission of constitutional amendments which they have adopted by direct vote. And more and more the constitutional amendments have provided for direct legislation and other forms of restraint upon the party in power. This tendency continued until in recent years the State constitutions have become codes of laws.

In the words of Ellis P. Oberholtzer, Ph. D., in the "Referendum in America," first edition (1891), pages 38–44:

"We have to-day come to the point when our State constitutions are nothing short of codes of laws giving instruction to the legislature and the other agents of government on nearly every subject of general public concern, and often stating the methods which shall be used in legislating, if not, indeed, actually legislating, on local questions. * * * The constitutions have become the repositories for much of the legislation which before was left to be enacted by the legislatures."

While these changes were taking place no one ever asked a supreme court to declare that it was unrepublican.

This stripping of power from the party "machine" through adopting constitutional amendments by direct vote of the people is described by the Hon. James Bryce, M. P., in "The American Commonwealth" as—

"A salutory effort of the forces which make for good government, opening for themselves a new channel." (American Commonwealth, 1st ed., vol. 1, p. 476.)

The next great stage in the restoration of the people's rule in this country was in 1896 in South Dakota. At that time the people of the State adopted a constitutional amendment placing in 5 per cent of the voters an option to call for a direct vote on any act of the legislature, except emergency measures and measures appropriating funds for the support of the State government and its existing public institutions; also the voters authorized 5 per cent of their number to propose measures to their fellow citizens, the will of the majority to become the law of the land.

These new institutions—the initiative and referendum, or, to be more precise, the popular initiative and optional referendum—make more effective the voters' acknowledged right to rule, besides abolishing nearly all the corruption.

During the 10 years that the South Dakota system of initiative and referendum have existed only three acts of the legislature have been ordered to a referendum vote, and these were such that the representatives were not charged with corruption. Not even one initiative petition has been submitted, yet the legislature has installed direct nominations and other reforms.

In South Dakota no one has asked the supreme court to abolish the people's veto power and power of direct legislation. It has been admitted that the system is a republican form of government.

And for 12 years the Congress of the United States has seated South Dakota's Senators and Representatives, thereby declaring that the initiative and referendum is a republican form of government.

In 1902 the people of Oregon installed the initiative and referendum. The next year this court, after mature deliberation, decided that the initiative, in combination with the elective legislative assembly and elective governor, is a republican form of government in the meaning of the Federal guaranty. In the meantime the Congress of the United States had seated Oregon's Senators and Representatives, thereby declaring again that the initiative and referendum is a republican form of government.

Later, 1906, the people of Montana installed the initiative and referendum and Congress seated their Senators and Representatives.

The following year the people of Oklahoma adopted a system of government in which there is the initiative and referendum, and the President in his proclamation announcing the admission of the State declared that the system is a republican form of government. When Congress assembled it seated the Senators and Representatives.

SUMMARY.

It is clear that the history of our country demonstrates that the meaning of "republican form of government" is a government in which the people rule as distinguished from a government in which the ruling power is in a single individual or in less than a majority—a monarchy or an oligarchy (aristocracy).

On this point kindly review the evidence, beginning at page 9.

B.

NARROWER MEANING OF REPUBLICAN FORM OF GOVERNMENT.

But for the affirmative decision of the question, Is direct legislation in combination with an elective legislative assembly a republican form of government within the meaning of the Federal guaranty? a much narrower meaning of republican form of government will suffice: It will be sufficient to hold that the guaranty of the maintenance of a republican form of government within the meaning of Article IV of the Federal Constitution is to be interpreted in the light of the State governments of 1787, each one of which was, admittedly, a republican form of government. Following is an accurate description of the essential parts of these State governments:

1. A GOVERNMENT THROUGH WHICH THE PEOPLE RULE, AS DISTINGUISHED FROM THE GOVERNMENT IN AN OLIGARCHY OR MONARCHY.

We have pointed out at page 15 above that in 1787 the system of government in the States was such that the people ruled, as distinguished from a government in which the ruling power is in less than a majority. The aim of the Federalist was to terminate the people's rule (pp. 20–26 above), but they failed, because of the success of the Massachusetts plan (p. 25 above), followed by Washington's refusal to accept more than one reelection, and then party government was established, and in the campaign of the year 1800 the Republican Party was elected to office. Then the Federalist Party dwindled and died.

2. A REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY AS DISTINGUISHED FROM A PURE DEMOCRACY.

A second distinguishing feature of each of the 13 States is that they were representative democracies as distinguished from pure democracies—that is, they were democracies in which representatives were employed. This is an undisputed fact.

Furthermore, these 13 democracies were the first representative democracies on this planet. In the evolution of government the Americans were the first of the Teutonic people to develop in a new country practically untrammeled by the conditions that existed in Europe, and it resulted in representative democracies. In Europe for more than 2,000 years the states had been growing in size through conquest, which had resulted in the rule of the few. But when the conditions that had come about through conquest were removed—that is, when the people settled in a practically uninhabited land—it resulted in representative democracies. This establishment of self-government in a large state was merely a reversion to the main features of the system of government that existed before conquest had altered the conditions, for it is a historical fact that in early times when Cæsar and the Roman legions attempted to conquer the Teutons some of their states were republics—the people were the ruling power and every citizen was eligible to the presidency—and in the other states, though the head of the government was elected from a certain family, the people by majority vote determined the public policies. (History of the English Constitution, by Prof. Rudolph Gneist, vol. 1, p. 15. See also writings of Bishop Stubbs.)

One of the most striking institutions of the Teutonic people is representative government. It did not exist in the Roman civilization, nor among the Greeks or Persians. It is the product of the people who have been the latest to develop.

The bases of this representative government and of the other factors in our present-day civilization are traits that were not possessed by the earlier nationalities. These added traits are a spirit of liberty far greater than that of the Romans or Greeks, and a higher moral character, including a recognition of vested rights. This last-named point will fully appear in a later section wherein the history of the American people is outlined.

Though the self-governing American people of the year 1787 employed representatives, they also legislated directly in several of the States. In other words, the governments in several of the representative democracies that first existed on this earth were mixed governments—partly representative and partly direct. Proof is as follows:

3. THE GOVERNMENTS IN SEVERAL OF THE REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACIES OF 1787 WERE PARTLY REPRESENTATIVE AND PARTLY DIRECT.

The colonists who arrived in New England settled in a practically uninhabited land. Such of the tribes as lived in the country were much lower in civilization. The settlers came from England, and they brought with them their liberty-giving political institutions. The government in local affairs was conducted at public meetings in which each freeman voted. The selectmen or any 10 voters could call a special town meeting.

In the course of time the settlements confederated, and it became necessary to employ representatives. But the people retained direct legislation in local affairs and their representatives were instructed at will. Proof of the right to instruct is presented in a later section.

The remarkable value of this system is stated as follows in Democracy in America, by Alexis De Tocqueville, the noted French historian:

"In New England townships were completely and definitely constituted as early as 1650. The independence of the township was the nucleus round which the local interests, passions, rights, and duties collected and clung. It gave scope to the activity of real political life, thoroughly democratic and republican. The colonies still recognized the supremacy of the mother country; monarchy was still the law of the State; but the republic was already established in every township.

"The American Revolution broke out and the doctrine of the sovereignty of the people came out of the townships and took possession of the State. Every class was enlisted in its cause; battles were fought and victories obtained for it; it became the law of laws." (Democracy in America, by De Tocqueville, vol. 1, p. 50.)

In Massachusetts and New Hampshire the voters enacted the State constitutions. In Massachusetts they first rejected one proposal for a State government. In New Hampshire three propcsals for a State government were rejected.

Furthermore, in the Massachusetts constitution of 1780, in force in 1787, it was provided that in the year 1795 the voters by direct ballot should determine whether or not the constitution should be revised. (Page 30 above.)

And in New Hampshire the constitution of 1784 to 1792 declares that at the "expiration of seven years from the time this constitution shall take effect" (1791) the legislature shall issue "precepts, or direct them to be issued from the secretary's office, to the several towns and incorporated places, to elect delegates to meet in convention for the purposes aforesaid; the said delegates to be chosen in the same manner and proportioned as the representatives to the general assembly; provided that no alteration shall be made in this constitution before the same shall be laid before the towns and unincorporated places, and approved by two-thirds of the qualified voters, and voting upon the question."

In addition to these provisions for direct legislation on State questions the Georgia constitution of 1777, in force until 1789, provides in Article LXIII:

"No alterations shall be made in this constitution without petitions from a majority of the counties, and the petitions from each county to be signed by a majority of voters in each county within this State; at which time the assembly shall order a convention to be called for that purpose, specifying the alterations to be made, according to the petitions preferred to the assembly by the majority of the counties as aforesaid."

In each of the 13 States the voters possessed the right to instruct representatives. Through this system the people could start legislation and secure its enactment, and they could stop the enactment of proposed measures. Of course the mere possession of the power did practically all the work.

SUMMARY.

The foregoing historical facts demonstrate that in 1787 in several of the American States, at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the Government was partly direct and partly representative—mixed government. That, combined with the national government of the American Confederacy, was the system that existed in the American representative democracies.

Judged by this standard the existing system of real direct legislation that is used in combination with representative government in Oklahoma, Montana, Maine, and Missouri, is of the character that existed in several of the States at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and, therefore, the system is a republican form of government.

IV. DEFENDANT'S FALLACIOUS ARGUMENTS.

Defendant's constructive argument (pp. 26–51) ignores the fact that there is such a thing as representative democracy.

And in the constructive portion of his brief he ignores the further fact that the governments in New England and in Georgia in 1787 were mixed governments.

To have admitted either of these facts would have destroyed the definitions of republic and democracy, on which he relies.

These definitions are obtained by defendant from a present-day dictionary. It is well understood that a mere dictionary definition is of little or no value for interpreting legal terms. In the case at bar, the truth of this statement is apparent, if the standard adopted by defendant be applied. This standard is also adopted by us, and is as follows:

"The guaranty of the Federal Constitution, in Article IV, section 4, is to be interpreted in the light of governments in existence when the Constitution was adopted." (Page 39 of defendant's brief.)

By applying this standard to defendant's dictionary definitions they are found to be incomplete and inaccurate. Defendant says:

"Webster defines a republic to be: 'A State in which the sovereign power resides in the whole body of the people, and is exercised by representatives elected by them.'"

This italic text is not an accurate description of the State governments of 1787, for in New England and in Georgia the governments were partly direct and partly representative; pages 38–41, above.

Thus defendant's basic proof is faulty.

Defendant goes on to say:

"This definition—Webster's definition of a republic—was adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States in its opinion in Downes v. Bidwell. (182 U. S., 279.)"

What the court did was merely to quote Webster's definition, and the question of the constitutionality of direct legislation was not entered into and was not involved in any way.

Defendant further says:

"A democracy Webster defines as: 'A government by the people; a form of government in which the supreme power is retained and directly exercised by the people.'"

The first part, namely, that a democracy is a government by the people, is clearly correct, but the latter part is obviously not correct if it is interpreted so as to exclude representative democracy. Apparently defendant so interprets it, and since, as we have pointed out, representative democracy existed in the various States during and prior to the adoption of the Constitution (p. 37, above), the fallacy involved in defendant's argument is clearly obvious.

Thus, defendant's definitions of republic and democracy are incorrect, judged by defendant's own standard.

There are other ways whereby their incorrectness can be shown. Glance back at the first part of the definition of a republic, namely, "A State in which the sovereign power resides in the whole body of the people."

Surely this is a democracy. Yet defendant claims that this democratic Republic is not a democracy. His caption on page 26 is:

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A REPUBLIC AND A DEMOCRACY.

Could there be a greater inconsistency?

But the motive is clearly apparent. Defendant is claiming that democracy—the people's rule—is "the irresponsible despotism of the mob," etc., and is asking this court to destroy Oregon's initiative. Should this defendant—a special-privilege corporation—succeed here in Oregon, it will open the way for a similar assault on the people's rule in the 5 other States that have established the initiative, and in the other 40 States it will tend to prevent the overthrow of machine rule—the reestablishment of the people's rule.

Still another way to show up the fallacies in defendant's definitions is to read James Madison's description of a republic in the Federalist, in letter No. 39, quoted at page 26, above.

To make our position perfectly clear we repeat that, according to the use of words in 1787, a republic is a democracy (the people's rule), as distinguished from a monarchy and an oligarchy (aristocracy). The means whereby the people ruled in 1787 was partly direct and partly through representatives (mixed government).

That the people ruled in the thirteen States in 1787 is distinctly stated in the proceedings of the National Constitutional Convention.

So how can the defendant, who accepts the State governments of 1787 as the standard for determining the meaning of "republican form of government," claim that it is a government in which the people do not rule?

The position is utterly indefensible.

FURTHER DETAILS.

Defendant quotes from many cases; also from various statements uttered in 1787, and from textbooks.

Some of these are in harmony with our argument, while in others there is a fallacy, namely, that a republican form of government, within the meaning of the Article IV in the Federal Constitution, is a representative government. The fact is that the governments in the thirteen States of 1787 were partly direct and partly representative (p. 38, above).

In section 4 a half truth is told, namely, that the extent of the territory of the States long sufficed, in the judgment of the friends of the Constitution, to condemn the establishment of a democratic form of government. The error would have been avoided by saying "a purely democratic form of government."

In section 6 the defendant claims that "republican form of government," as those words were used by the framers of the Constitution, was used to distinguish the "American from the other Republics by the introduction of the principle of representation" (p. 43). Very well. We will admit it for the sake of argument, and then we point to the undisputed fact that in connection with the principle of representation there existed also, alongside of it, the principle of direct legislation. This completely spoils the defendant's case, for it demonstrates that the Government was a combination of the two systems—mixed government.

Defendant tries to wriggle out of it. He admits, at page 52, that direct legislation existed in local affairs in "Massachusetts and other States," and then he attempts to avoid the effect of this admission by stating as a positive fact the very question at issue, namely:

"The Federal Government recognizes only one method of exercising the State legislative powers, i. e., by State legislatures."

When a defendant argues in this manner it is pretty certain that his contention is a very difficult one to establish.

In the next section (p. 53) the defendant squarely faces the issue, but the evidence he presents does not prove his case. His claim is:

"Direct legislation is invalid, because government by the people directly is inconsistent with our form of government."

Such is the caption, and the opening statement is as follows:

"It has been shown that the vital element in a republican form of government, as that phrase is used in American political science, is representation. Legislation by the people directly is the very opposite, the negative, of this principle. It can therefore have no place in our form of government. Indeed, it has been repeatedly said to be contrary to and subversive of the structure of our Republic." (Italic letters are defendant's.) (Defendant's brief, p. 53.)

The fallacy is in the claim that representation is the sole and only method whereby the people ruled at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution.

Defendant attempts to prove his claim by the following authorities, but he completely fails:

REVIEW OF DEFENDANT'S AUTHORITIES IN SECTION 9.

He quotes from Letter No. 63 in the Federalist, which merely distinguishes the modern democracies (representative democracies) from the democracies of earlier times—pure democracies.

Defendant relies upon in re Duncan (139 U. S., 449). Following is his quotation from the case:

"By the Constitution a republican form of government is guaranteed to every State in the Union, and the distinguishing feature of that form is the right of the people to choose their own officers for governmental administration and pass their own laws in virtue of the legislative power reposed in representative bodies whose legitimate acts may be said to be those of the people themselves; but while the people are thus the source of political power their governments, National and State, have been limited by written constitutions, and they have themselves set bounds to their own power as against the sudden impulses of mere majorities." (P. 54 of defendant's brief.)

The facts before the Chief Justice when he delivered the foregoing opinion did not include the question of whether direct legislation is or is not inconsistent with a republican form of government, and he in the opinion does not refer in any way to direct legislation. Approximately the statement in italics is correct, for it is a well-known fact that in the various States of the Union at the time the foregoing was written, and in 1787, representatives were employed and the legislation enacted was almost exclusively by them, but direct legislation existed to some extent, as is demonstrated by us at pages 38–40 above.

Next, defendant quotes from State courts in which the Federalist position is asserted in obiter dicta or in the points decided, but, as we have shown in an earlier section, the Federalist idea completely failed through the success of the Massachusetts plan. This is a complete answer to the statements quoted from State v. Swisher (17 Tex. 448, 449; Rice v. Foster (4 Harr. (Del.), 479); The People v. Collins (3 Mich., 416, 417); Thorne v. Cramer (15 Barb (N. Y.), 112); Parker v. Commonwealth (6 Barr (Pa.), 507, 512, 516, 519); Borough of West Philadelphia (5 Watts and Sarg. (Pa.), 283); Clarke v. City of Rochester (28 N. Y., 606, 663). More in detail:

In State v. Swisher the Supreme Court of Texas, in 1856, declared that the legislature had no power to pass a local-option liquor law. The reason assigned was that the legislature had no power to delegate to the voters of the county the question of whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquor should be licensed. "But," continues the court, "besides the fact that the constitution does not provide for such reference to the voters to give validity to the acts of the legislature, we regard it as repugnant to the principles of the republican government formed by our constitution." Later, however, a local-option liquor law was held valid in the Texas Supreme Court. The cases are San Antonio v. Jones (28 Tex., 32), Werner v. City of Galveston (72 Tex., 22), Johnson v. Martin (75 Tex., 33).

In Rice v. Foster the Delaware Supreme Court, in 1847, decided that the legislature was not authorized to pass a local-option liquor law. In this case, as later occurred in State v. Swisher, above described, there is obiter dicta, in which the Federalist idea is enunciated. But defendant's brief fails to add that since these decisions were rendered the courts of the country hold with practical unanimity that legislatures, under the State constitutions, are clothed with power to refer to the voters the question of adopting local-option laws.

In People v. Collins in the Michigan Supreme Court, in 1854, it was decided that the legislature had not the power under the State constitution to refer to the people the question of whether or not a bill for a State law should take effect. The question was simply as to the power conferred upon the legislature by the State constitution.

In Thorne v. Cramer the New York Supreme Court points out the well-known need for representatives in great States.

In Parker v. Commonwealth the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in 1847, decided that a local-option liquor law was unconstitutional. Defendant quotes largely from this case, but fails to inform this court that the case has been overruled. In Locke's Appeal (72 Pa., 491), decided in 1873, it is said:

"It is argued that Parker v. Commonwealth (6 Barr) decided the question before us. That case was overruled soon after it was decided, not in express terms, it is true, but its foundation was undermined when it was held that laws could constitutionally be made dependent on a popular vote for their operation."

In Borough of West Philadelphia and in Clarke v. City of Rochester the utterances quoted by defendant are merely the obiter dicta of the judges who wrote the decisions.

SUMMARY.

It is clear that the defendant's authorities do not prove his case, the difficulty being that his proposition that the Republic of 1787 was not a democracy but an oligarchy is not capable of substantiation.

The foregoing review of defendant's authorities takes us where he starts in to answer some of the State of Oregon's claims. This he does at page 66, section 10.

DEFENDANT'S ANSWER IS INSUFFICIENT.

In answer to the unquestioned fact that State constitutions are adopted by direct vote of the people and that this system is admittedly a republican form of government, defendant states that the adoption of constitutional amendments "is not legislation."

This answer is insufficient, for the constitutions contain subject matter that is as purely legislative as anything can be. (See pp. 33, 34, above.)

Defendant's next point is as follows:

"(b) Nor does the practice of legislating directly in municipal affairs furnish a precedent. It has been pointed out that nothing is more firmly engrafted on the institutions of this country than the practice of conducting the business of municipalities by assemblies of voters."

We submit that the above is an inadequate answer, for defendant simply admits that the system existed. He admits that it is direct legislation, and that the system was in use in 1787. In other words, he admits that the governments in the representative democracies in New England were mixed governments.

SUMMARY.

We submit that defendant has not proven his case. He has not presented to this court the slightest ground for it to declare that "republican form of government," within the meaning of the guaranty in the Federal Constitution, is anything more than a guaranty "against aristocratic or monarchical innovations," as is expressly declared in Letter No. 43 in the Federalist. And even where, for argument's sake, we take up other features of the State governments we find that several of these State governments of 1787 were partly representative and partly direct. Therefore, even by this standard, the present-day system of real direct legislation in combination with representative government is a republican form of government within the meaning of the guaranty in the Federal Constitution.

V. THROUGH THE INITIATIVE THE PEOPLE OF OREGON HAVE REASSERTED THEIR RIGHT TO RULE.

In the use that has been made of the initiative in Oregon in the defendant's case, the people and the governor have merely levied a reasonable tax which, in several States, has been levied by the legislature. (21 Am. and Eng. Ency. of L., 778, note 6.) In Oregon the legislature refused to levy such a tax, and it did so in controvention of the people's will, as is evidenced by their vote on the initiative measure, namely, yes, 70,872; no, 6,360, or 11 to 1.

In other words, through the use of the initiative the people of Oregon have reasserted their right to rule. They have discarded the rule of the few under guise of popular government—machine rule. In a short time the membership in the legislatures will be such that the people's wishes will doubtless be carried out by their representatives. Such is the case in many of the States to-day, and the same will become true in Oregon.

We have presented one instance of where the Oregon legislative assembly refused to carry out the people's will. Other examples are as follows:

The legislative assembly refused to establish a system of direct nominations and the people got it through direct legislation. But in three-fourths of the States of the Union the legislature has established direct nominations, thereby reflecting the people's will. Oregon's Legislature refused to empower the people to say whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquor should be licensed in their midst, and it was through direct legislation that the people secured the system. In more than three-fourths of the States in this country the right was granted by the legislature.

In Oregon the legislature refused to prohibit the railroads from discriminating by giving passes. In most of the other States of the Union the legislature terminated the giving of these special privileges.

These examples demonstrate that through the initiative the people of Oregon have reasserted their right to rule. In a later section we explain how it came about that machine rule was established.

VI. DEFENDANT'S REAL CONTENTION IS THAT REPRESENTATIVES ARE RULERS.

Defendant's real contention is that a republican form of government, within the meaning of the Federal guaranty, is a government in which the legislative representatives are rulers—are not delegates (agents).

Proof that this is defendant's real contention is the fact that he is objecting to the people's rule. The people of Oregon willed that the gross receipts of telegraph and telephone companies shall be taxed, and the defendant objects.

Further proof is defendant's concluding statement at page 147:

"The question is submitted with confidence that the courts of this country will protect the people in the enjoyment of those constitutional checks and safeguards against their own power which, with wisdom and deliberation, they created for themselves. Injustice and misrule have characterized all unconstitutional democracies and all popular governments administered in accordance with the whims and caprices of the multitude (majority rule)."

On page 22 the defendant speaks of the rule of the majority as "the irresponsible despotism of the mob," and says that it "has no place in our policy."

In other words, defendant claims that the few men elected to office by the voters are their rulers; that legislative policies should be determined by the representatives of the voters.

OUR ANSWER.

Our answer is that the system of government in each of the 13 States in 1787 was such that the representatives were not rulers but delegates—agents.

Convincing proofs are the Bills of Rights in five of the States, wherein the voters reserved the right to assemble to instruct their representatives. The States were North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Vermont. The wording of the reservation is substantially as follows:

"No law shall be passed restraining any of the inhabitants of the State from assembling together in a peaceable manner to consult for their common good, nor for instructing their representatives, nor from applying to the legislature for redress of grievances." (Constitution of Oregon, 1857, art. 1, sec. 27.)

Further proofs are the newspapers and other written records of that era in which are chronicled the instructions that were actually given to the representatives. These records show that at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution most of the delegates to the State conventions were instructed, which reveals a habit of instructing representatives. The evidence on this last-named point has been carefully collected by Mr. O. G. Libby, of Wisconsin University, who says:

"Very many delegates went instructed to conventions and voted according to their instructions, and in many other cases there was a correspondence between the votes of the delegates and the ascertained attitude of the constituency; only three exceptions have been discovered. When the difficulty of recovering such instructions from scattered town records, newspapers, etc., is considered the number of them existing is quite remarkable." (Bulletin of the University of Wisconsin, vol. 1, pp. 5 and 6.)

In a later chapter in which Mr. Libby reviews the evidence from which the foregoing generalization is made, he says:

The evidence reveals a habit of instructing representatives firmly fixed in the political ideas of the time.

The evidence which Mr. Libby presents shows that in the States outside of New England the principal method whereby the people voted on the adoption or rejection of the proposed constitution of 1787 was by voting for pledged candidates.

MEANING OF RIGHT TO INSTRUCT.

What is really meant by a right to instruct is stated as follows in the minutes of the Boston town meeting of 1764:

"By this choice they [the freeholders of this town] have delegated to you the power of acting in their public concerns, in general, as your prudence shall direct you; always reserving to themselves the constitutional right of expressing their minds and giving you such instructions upon particular matters, as they at any time shall judge proper." (Proceedings of the American Political Science Association, 1907, vol. 4, p. 159.)

In other words, the legislative representatives are delegates (agents) and not rulers. They are clothed with discretionary power except when their constituents shall choose to decide for themselves. In the Boston town meeting records this right to instruct is spoken of as a "constitutional right," which means that it had existed from time immemorial.

PROOF OF USE OF INSTRUCTIONS.

In the township of Boston the right to instruct representatives in the general court (legislature) was exercised 12 times during the seventeenth century. In the eighteenth century such instructions were given at least 36 times before the right was inscribed in the State constitution. (Proceedings of the American Political Science Association, 1907, vol. 4, p. 157.)

Following is proof that Members of Congress were instructed by direct vote of the people at town meetings, also that two proposals for a State constitution were directly voted upon by the people at town meetings.

The minutes of the town clerk of Weston, Mass., are republished in a volume, in which it is said:

"At a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Weston [Mass.], being legally warned, assembled at the public meeting house in said town on Monday, the 12th day of January, 1778, at 1 o'clock p. m.

"First. To hear and consider of articles of perpetual union between ye United States of America, formed and proposed to ye legislative body of this State by ye honorable the Congress, and to instruct your representative to act and to do as you judge mostly for the advantage of this and ye United States.

"Second. To hear an address of ye House of Representatives to the inhabitants of this State setting forth ye reason which induced the House to pass an act for calling in the bills of credit emitted by ye government and obviating the objections that have been made to it.

"They then chose Josiah Strong, Esq., moderator.

"1. Voted to accept of the consideration of perpetual union as adopted by the Congress and that the representatives be instructed to act accordingly.

"2. Voted not to hear the second article in the warrant at this meeting."

Twenty days later another special town meeting was held and it was voted not to act upon the warrant.

March 2 the regular annual town meeting was held at which considerable business was transacted and an adjournment taken for one week.

May 18 the freeholders and other inhabitants met to choose a representative in the great and general court (legislature) to assemble May 27.

Ten days later the freeholders and other inhabitants met at 4 o'clock p. m.—

"1. To hear the form of government as adopted by the convention of ye Massachusetts Bay and act thereon.

"2. To know the minds of the town if they will do anything relative to the war committee.

"3. Also to know their minds if they will make an additional grant to support the war.

"4. To know the minds of the town if they will allow to each man drafted for three months last August for ye northern campaign what they pay, respectively, for hiring of men.

"They then chose Mr. Joseph Roberts moderator for the meeting.

"1. Voted to act upon the constitution and form of government sent for their consideration.

"2. Voted to choose a committee of nine men, and nominations being called for the following gentlemen were named: * * *.

"3. Voted that the above committee take under consideration the plan of government and make a report to the town at the time of their adjournment.

[Three other objects were considered and voted upon.]

"Voted to adjourn to June 8 at 3 o'clock."

Agreeable to the adjournment, the inhabitants met and voted as follows:

For the approbation of ye constitution of government	6
Against it or disapprobation	57

This rejection of the proposed constitution of Massachusetts by the people of Weston was a fair sample of what was done in the other towns. The people of Massachusetts vetoed the proposed system of State government, and by 5 to 1 vote—for there were no limitations upon the legislature—no bill of rights. All Anglo-Saxons had possessed bills of rights from about the year 100 A. D., and here in Massachusetts only a hundred years ago the people preserved their ancient liberties through the direct-vote system.

In 1780, two years after the Massachusetts people vetoed the proposed constitution, they secured the submission of a splendid one and adopted it. The manner of its adoption in the township of Weston is described as follows in the minutes of the town clerk:

"At a meeting of the freeholders and other inhabitants of the town of Weston that were by law qualified to vote in town affairs in public town meeting assembled on Monday, the 6th day of March, A. D. 1780—

* * * * * * *

"8. To hear the account of the delegate chosen by the town to attend on the convention to form a new constitution of government and act thereon."

The hearing of the report was deferred, but on May 15 a meeting was held—

"1. To hear and act upon a constitution or form of government agreed upon by the delegates of the people of the State of Massachusetts Bay."

The town clerk's minutes further show:

"1. Voted not to choose a committee to act upon the constitution.

"2. Voted to accept the constitution and form of government as it now stands, but it is our opinion that it should be revised within 10 years and made certain. Yeas 5½, nays 20."

In the North Carolina Colonial Records there are republished the following instructions:

"At a general conference of the inhabitants of Mecklenberg assembled at the courthouse on the 1st of November, 1776, for the express purpose of drawing up instructions for the present Representatives in Congress, the following were agreed to by the assent of the people present and ordered to be signed by John M. Alexander, chairman chosen to preside for the day in said conference:

"To Waightstill Avery, Hezekiah Alexander, John Phifer, Robert Erwin, and Zacheus Wilson, Esquires:

"GENTLEMEN: You are chosen by the inhabitants of this country to serve them in Congress or general assembly for one year, and they have agreed to the following instructions, which you are to observe with the strictest regard, viz: You are instructed:

"1. That you shall consent to and approve the Declaration of the Continental Congress declaring the 13 United States Colonies free and independent States."

Eighteen additional paragraphs of instructions by the people follow, including one for a bill of rights in the proposed constitution for the State, and that the instrument be referred to the people for adoption. (Vol. 10, Colonial Records of North Carolina, 870a.)

In Orange County, N. C., the instructions to the delegates were as follows:

"We, the people of the county of Orange, who have chosen you to represent us in the next Congress of Representatives delegated by the people of this State, require you take notice that the following are our instructions to you which you are required to follow in every particular with strictest regard." (Vol. 10, Colonial Records of North Carolina, 870f.)

These instructions were in 1776.

Proof that in 1787 in North Carolina and in the other 12 States the delegates who were elected to the State conventions to consider and act upon the proposal to adopt the Federal Constitution were instructed is the evidence that has been collected by Mr. O. G. Libby, of Wisconsin University, referred to in a preceding page.

Reviewing this section it is clear that at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution in 1787 the representatives were delegates and not rulers.

FALLACIOUS ARGUMENTS BY HOLDERS OF SPECIAL PRIVILEGES.

To-day, nearly a century after the people of this country had ceased to instruct at town meetings and county conferences because a better system had existed for a time, namely, party conventions, the few who have secured special privileges and therefore are intent on preventing the restoration of the people's rule are declaring that representative government in this country is a system wherein the few men in office are not delegates but are rulers. Among other things they attempt to prove it by quoting from Edmund Burke's speech to his constituents in 1780, but they conceal the further fact that his constituents refused to reelect him, thereby maintaining their right to instruct. Burke's speech, in which he withdrew from the contest on election day, even before the ballots were all cast, is published in the same volume from which our opponents quote, but they carefully refrain from mentioning it. In Bell & Sons' edition of Burke's speeches, in Volume II, page 170, in declining the poll, Burke said:

"I have not canvassed the whole of this city in form. But I have taken such a view of it as satisfies my own mind that your choice will not ultimately fall on me. * * * I confided, perhaps, too much in my intentions. They were really fair and upright; and I am bold to say that I ask no ill thing for you when on parting from this place I pray that whomever you choose to succeed me he may resemble me exactly in all things except in my abilities to serve and my fortune to please you."

BASIS OF RIGHT TO INSTRUCT.

The people's unquestioned right to pledge representatives to obey instructions is a consequence of their right to elect to office. In the words of John Stuart Mill in Representative Government, Chapter XII:

"Let the system of representation be what it may, it will be converted into one of mere delegation if the electors so choose. As long as they are free not to vote, and free to vote as they like, they can not be prevented from making their vote depend on any condition they think fit to annex to it. By refusing to elect anyone who will not pledge himself to all their opinions, and even, if they please, to consult with them before voting on any important subject not foreseen, they can reduce their representative to their mere mouthpiece or compel him in honor, when no longer willing to act in that capacity, to resign his seat." (Quoted in The Platform, Its Rise and Progress, by Henry Jephson, Vol. II, p. 434.)

BLACKSTONE'S FALLACY.

The "Commentaries on the Laws of England," by Sir William Blackstone, are the lectures that were delivered at Oxford University, the educational center of toryism. In these lectures the professor argued for the rule of the few and afterwards his services were rewarded by the Tory government which knighted him. This was in the year 1770. Following is the noted instance wherein Prof. Blackstone argued against the people's power to instruct their representatives:

"The number of English Representatives is 513, and of Scots 45; in all, 558. And every member, though chosen by one particular district, when elected, and returned, serves for the whole realm; for the end of his coming thither is not particular, but general; not barely to advantage his constituents, but the commonwealth; to advise his majesty (as appears from the writ of summons) 'de communi consilio super negotiis quibusdam arduis et urgentibus, regem statum, defensionem regni Angliae et ecclesiae Anglicanae concernentibus.' And therefore he is not bound, like a deputy in the united provinces, to consult with, or take the advice of, his constituents upon any particular point, unless he himself thinks it proper or prudent so to do." (Blackstone's Commentaries, Vol. I, p. 159.)

The fallacy in the foregoing is that the mere form of the English Government is said to be the real thing, which it is not, for England is a constitutional monarchy, and has been since 1714.

Party government in England commenced at that time, and representatives have been delegates. Edmund Burke's case is an instance of where the voters insisted on electing a man who would obey instructions.

Another fallacy in Blackstone's statement is that he cites the ancient Roman law (4 Justinian Institutes, 18). The few who in England had secured special privileges loved to refer to the ancient Roman civilization to prove that the King was all powerful, but the Anglo-Saxons are a more modern people and are fast approaching real representative democracy.

SUMMARY.

A review of the foregoing section will clearly demonstrate that at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution the government in the several States was such that the legislative representatives were delegates and not rulers.

VII. DEFENDANT'S CONTENTION FOR RULE OF THE FEW IS SIMILAR TO THE FEDERALIST PROGRAM THAT WAS DEFEATED BY THE MASSACHUSETTS PLAN.

Defendant's real contention, namely, that the legislative representatives are rulers and not delegates, is similar to the claim put forth by the Federalists in the proposed Constitution, which was defeated by the success of the Massachusetts plan.

The system of government proposed by the Federalists was one in which the people should not possess the right to instruct their representatives. That was the basic principle, as is evidenced by Madison's explanation in Letter No. X, in the Federalist, and also the proposed Constitution. In Letter No. X it is said:

"The two great points of difference between a democracy and a republic are, first, the delegation of the government in the latter to a small number of citizens elected by the rest; secondly, the greater number of citizens and greater sphere of country over which the latter may be extended.

* * * * * * *

"The effect of the first difference is, on the one hand, to refine and enlarge the public views by passing them through the medium of a chosen body of citizens, whose wisdom may best discern the true interest of their country and whose patriotism and love of justice will be least likely to sacrifice it to temporary or partial considerations."

Here is the declaration for a government in which the discretionary power is to be vested in "a small number of citizens elected by the rest," in which the people were not to possess a right to instruct, for the proposed constitution contained no bill of rights, and therefore it completely delegated the legislative power as follows:

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." (Federal Constitution, Art. I, sec. 1.)

But this proposed system was defeated through the success of the Massachusetts plan, whereby Amendments I to X were adopted, and the ninth of which is as follows:

"The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people."

Among the rights thus reserved to the people is the right to instruct, for in five of the State constitutions there is expressly reserved to the people the right to assemble to instruct Representatives (p. 50 above).

In a debate in the First Congress, August 15, 1789, Mr. Madison expressly stated that should the people possess the right to instruct their Representatives, it would mean that they and not the few men in office would be the ruling power. Madison's exact words are:

"The consequence that instructions are binding on the Representatives is of doubtful if not of a dangerous nature. So far as it is of doubtful nature, so far it obligates us to run the risk of losing the whole system." (Debates in the First Congress, Aug. 15, 1789.)

The debate arose over a proposal to incorporate in one of the proposed amendments the statement:

"The right of the people to instruct shall never be infringed."

Observe that the statement admits the existence of the right to instruct.

From the beginning of the First Congress the legislatures instructed Representatives, as is evidenced by the following entry in the diary of United States Senator Maclay, of Pennsylvania, March 22, 1790:

"The doctrine of instruction may certainly be carried so far as to be, in effect, the tribunitial veto of the Romans and reduce us to the state of a Polish Diet. But it is introduced. Perhaps the best way is for all the States to use it, and the general evil, if it really should be one, will call for a remedy." (Journal of William Maclay, p. 220.)

In the House the Members were subject to instructions in such of the districts as the voters cared to enforce it, for they had it in their power to refuse to elect a candidate who should refuse to promise to obey instructions.

It is clear that the Federalist idea was defeated. Further details are in the succeeding section.

VIII. IN 1796 A NEW SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT WAS ESTABLISHED—PARTY GOVERNMENT, IN WHICH THE PEOPLE'S SOVEREIGNTY IS ACKNOWLEDGED—HISTORY OF PARTY GOVERNMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

A few years after the adoption of the Federal Constitution a new system of government was established, namely, party government.

Party government is government by a political party, operating through the departments that have been established by constitutional law. Here in the United States the Federal Constitution has established the Congress of the United States, and the executive and judicial departments, and through these the party system operates. The real government, therefore, is the party in power. The constitutional provisions concerning the Congress and executive and judicial branches are merely the framework.

The function of party government is to secure a widespread cooperation for political purposes. The system came into being in England shortly after the revolution of 1688 as the result of intelligent leadership, combined with the fact that a considerable portion of the liberty-loving Anglo-Saxons had become so powerful that the King and the nobles could no longer rule. Wherever there is a considerable degree of intelligence among the people party government is a necessity.

The framers of the Federal Constitution endeavored to prevent the establishment of party government, as is evidenced by various provisions, among which is the one that the candidate for the Presidency who should receive the second highest vote should be Vice President. This was changed in 1804.

For eight years, 1788 to 1796, there was no party government. President Washington called to his Cabinet the leaders of both the Republicans and the Federalists.

But in 1796, when the choice of Washington's successor arose, there were two well-defined political organizations, the Federalist Party and the Republican Party, each endeavoring to secure control of the Government. That year the Federalist organization secured the Presidency and a majority in the Senate, while the Republicans secured the Vice Presidency, and most of the time were able to control the House.

The choice between presidential nominees was practically by direct vote of the people, for the nominees for presidential electors were only those who pledged in advance of their nomination that, if elected, they would vote for their party's nominee.

Two years later, 1798, owing to attempted blackmail of our Government by some members of the French Directory and a knowledge of it in this country, the Federalist organization secured full control in the House, and for the first time a complete control of the entire Government.

But soon the party's actions were so unconstitutional as to bring forth bitter protests and at the following election, in the year 1800, the voters placed the Republican Party in power, both in Congress and in the White House. Then under Thomas Jefferson's leadership a truly people's-rule system prevailed and the country was so prosperous that the organization's power continued to increase and in 1817 the Federalist national organization disbanded. Thenceforth for eight years there was only one national political organization, the Democratic-Republican Party. In the words of Alexander Johnston, professor of political economy at Princeton University:

"Membership in it (the Democratic-Republican Party) was so essential to political advancement that after 1817 all national opposition to it came to an end. * * * The idea that the people were to impose their notions of public policy upon their rulers, and not altogether to receive them from their rulers, which the Federalists had always detested at heart, had now been accepted by all politicians." (Lalor's Encyclopedia of Political Science and United States History, Vol. III, p. 1101.)

Thus the Federalist idea of "the delegation of the Government to a small number of citizens elected by the rest" was completely rejected.

The results of the people's rule were far-reaching:

RESULTS OF THE PEOPLE'S RULE, 1776–1833.

Beginning in 1776 and for many years thereafter the people in the thirteen States established equal rights within the family and between families by abolishing entails and primogeniture. Also they established equal right between churches by separating the church and State. And they established equal rights to an education through a system of free public schools. These far-reaching changes are outlined at page 19, above.

The result of these measures, combined with the other progressive tendencies, resulted in an extension of the right to vote. During the years 1800 to 1826 white manhood suffrage was established in practically all the Eastern States and Southern States. In the Western States this system existed from the start.

Under competing political leaders the voters secured greater and greater control of the nomination and election of public servants and greater control of public policies. County nominating conventions sprang up, then State nominating conventions, beginning in 1823. The candidates for nomination announced their attitude toward public policies and at an early date the party's attitude on political issues was declared. Next the national nominating conventions were established, 1830–1832.

At about this time, namely, 1833, the noted French historian, Alexis De Tocqueville, visited the United States and said:

"At the present day the principle of the sovereignty of the people has acquired, in the United States, all the practical development which the imagination can conceive. * * * The people reign in the American political world as the Deity does in the universe. They are the cause and the aim of all things; everything comes from them and everything is absorbed in them." (Democracy in America, Vol. I, p. 72.)

These party conventions worked well for a time. In the words of United States Senator Thomas H. Benton concerning the national party conventions:

"Party nominations by conventions of delegates from the States worked well at first, the will of the people being strictly obeyed by the delegates, and the majority making the nominations." (Thirty Years in the United States Senate, vol. 1, p. 49.)

The results of the people's rule are summed up as follows by De Tocqueville:

"America exhibits in her social state an extraordinary phenomenon. Men are there seen on a greater equality in point of fortune and intellect, or, in other words, more equal in their strength, than in any other country in the world, or in any age of which history has preserved the remembrance." (Democracy in America, vol. 1, p. 67.)

The method whereby this was brought about is described by De Tocqueville in the following words:

"The English laws concerning the transmission of property were abolished in almost all the States at the time of the Revolution. The law of entail was so modified as not materially to interrupt the free circulation of property. The first generation having passed away, estates began to be parceled out; and the change became more and more rapid with the progress of time. And now after a lapse of a little more than 60 years, the aspect of society is totally altered; the families of the great landed proprietors are almost all commingled with the general mass. In the State of New York, which formerly contained many of these, there are but two who still keep their heads above the stream; and they must shortly disappear. The sons of these opulent citizens have become merchants, lawyers, or physicians. Most of them have lapsed into obscurity. The last trace of hereditary ranks and distinctions is destroyed—the law of partition has reduced all to one level.

"I do not mean that there is any lack of wealthy individuals in the United States; I know of no country, indeed, where the love of money has taken stronger hold on the affections of men, and where a profounder contempt is expressed for the theory of the permanent equality of property. But wealth circulates with inconceivable rapidity, and experience shows that it is rare to find two succeeding generations in the full enjoyment of it." (Democracy in America, pp. 63–64.)

Two years after the French Revolution of 1848 De Tocqueville in the preface to the 12th edition of his work said:

"However sudden and momentous the events which we have just beheld so swiftly accomplished, the author of this book has a right to say that they have not taken him by surprise. His work was written 15 years ago, with a mind constantly occupied with a single thought—that the advent of democracy as a governing power in the world's affairs, universal and irresistible, was at hand. Let it be read over again, and there will be found on every page a solemn warning that society changes its forms, humanity its condition, and that new destinies are impending. It was stated in the very introduction of the work that the gradual development of the principle of equality is a providential fact. It has all the chief characteristics of such a fact; it is universal, it is durable, it constantly eludes all human interference, and all events as well as all men contribute to its progress. Would it be wise to imagine that a social movement, the causes of which lie so far back, can be checked by the efforts of one generation? Can it be believed that the democracy, which has overthrown the feudal system and vanquished kings, will retreat before tradesmen and capitalists? Will it stop, now that it has grown so strong and its adversaries so weak? * * *

"Now, this problem, which among us has just been proposed for solution, was solved by America more than 60 years ago. The principle of the sovereignty of the people, which we enthroned in France but yesterday, has in America held undivided sway for over 60 years. It is there reduced to practice in the most direct, the most unlimited, and the most absolute manner. For 60 years, the people who have made it the common source of all their laws have increased continually in population, in territory, and in opulence; and—consider it well—it is found to have been, during that period, not only the most prosperous, but the most stable of all the Nations of the earth. While all the Nations of Europe have been devastated by war or torn by civil discord, the American people alone in the civilized world have remained at peace. Almost all Europe was convulsed by revolutions; America has not had even a revolt. The Republic there has not been the assailant, but the guardian of all vested rights; the property of individuals has had better guaranties there than in any other country of the world; anarchy has there been as unknown as despotism." (Democracy in America, pp. 53–54.)

Thus history answers all who claim that the people's rule is mob rule.

ESTABLISHMENT OF THE RULE OF THE FEW AND THE RESULTS.

But the people lost the power to rule. The change came stealthily like a thief in the night. Quietly and unobtrusively the convention system of the two great parties was debased. In issuing the calls for the conventions, the State and National committees of the Whig and the Democratic Parties provided that instead of delegates "fresh from the people," as Jackson termed it, and who obeyed instructions, the conventions were to be composed of delegates elected by delegates, who were to be elected by delegates, and in some cases these delegates were to be elected by other delegates, so that the people could not rule, for they had ceased to exercise the right to instruct at town meetings and mass meetings, and could not resume it while participating in the election of delegates to the party conventions.

During 1844, in an address to the American people, the system was thoroughly exposed by John C. Calhoun, who said:

"I object, then, to the proposed convention, because it will not be constituted in conformity with the fundamental articles of the republican creed. The delegates to it will be appointed from some of the States, not by the people in district, but, as has been stated, by State conventions en masse, composed of delegates appointed in all cases, as far as I am informed, by county or district conventions, and in some cases, if not misinformed, these again composed of delegates appointed by still smaller divisions, or a few interested individuals. Instead, then, of being directly, or fresh from the people, the delegates to the Baltimore convention will be the delegates of delegates, and of course removed in all cases at least three, if not four, degrees from the people. At each successive remove the voice of the people will become less full and distinct until, at last, it will be so faint and imperfect as not to be audible. To drop metaphor, I hold it impossible to form a scheme more perfectly calculated to annihilate the control of the people over the presidential election, and vest it in those who make politics a trade and who live, or expect to live, on the Government." (Thirty Years in the United States Senate, vol. 1, p. 596.)

In 1853 former Senator Thomas H. Benton, in his carefully prepared memoirs, said:

"Mr. Calhoun considered the convention system degenerated to the point it was in 1844, to have been a hundred times more objectionable than the Congress caucuses which had been repudiated by the people; measured by the same scale, they are a thousand times worse at present, having succeeded to every objection that was made against the Congress caucuses, and superadded a multitude of others going directly to scandalous corruption, open intrigue, direct bargain and sale, and flagrant disregard of the popular will." (Thirty Years in the United States Senate, vol. 1, p. 597.)

The convention system grew worse and worse, and in the contest over the extension of slavery the Democratic and the Republican organizations, through their control of the Government, North and South became engaged in civil war.

During the war the private banking corporations exercised great political power, and after the war these and other of the private corporations increased in strength. Private monopolies developed rapidly and more and more money was invested in politics.

The machine-ruled system of government is minutely described in The American Commonwealth, by Hon. James Bryce, M. P., the present ambassador from Great Britain. He describes "The machine," "What the machine has done," "How the machine works," and in conclusion says:

"Observing the form of consulting the voters, it substantially ignores them, and forces on them persons whom they do not know, and would dislike if they knew them. It substitutes for the party voters generally a small number of professionals and their creatures, extracts prearranged nominations from packed meetings, and calls this consulting the pleasure of the sovereign people. * * * Thus the machine works on and grinds out places, power, and opportunities for illicit gain to those who manage it." (The American Commonwealth, vol. 2, p. 106, 1st ed.)

Under this rule-of-the-few system the concentration of wealth became enormous, accompanied with political corruption, child labor, and all the other evils that follow from a plutocracy.

RESTORATION OF THE PEOPLE'S RULE.

Bryce's two-volume work was the first book to describe party government in this country, though the system had been established for nearly 100 years, and for 50 years quite completely. Bryce's own words are:

"Even in the United States, where party organization early attained a completeness and effective power unapproached in any other country, I could not find, when in 1883 I began to study and was seeking to portray the institutions of that country, any account of the very remarkable and well-compacted scheme or organization which had been at work there for 40 or 50 years; and noted that among even the best educated men there were few who had mastered its details. The historical action of the parties, their principles or tenets, their local distribution, the social influences that pervaded them, the character of the men who had led them—these were the matters on which attention had been fixed, to the neglect of the less attractive and less conspicuous questions connected with the machinery by which they worked. There was no book on which one could draw, and the persons whom I interrogated usually seemed surprised that a stranger should feel interested in inquiries of the kind." (Preface to Democracy and the Organization of Political Parties, by M. Ostrogorski, p. 39.)

Bryce's book describing our disgraceful system of machine rule raised up a reform spirit that has increased yearly. The Australian ballot was just coming into use in Massachusetts, and the reform quickly spread to all the other States, though seriously crippled by artful loopholes placed in the bill by the ruling machine.

After a time the registration of voters was secured.

Amendments to the ballot laws were effected.

A movement to place the primaries under the control of public officials was commenced and carried to a successful conclusion.

Then success began to crown the efforts to abolish the convention system—direct nominations began to be established, and the movement has partially succeeded in more than three-fourths of the States. It surely will go on to completion.

In 20 of the States the direct-nomination system includes United States Senators, also the candidates for the legislature are pledged that if elected they will vote for the senatorial candidate who receives the highest vote at the primaries. In Oregon the pledge is to vote for the people's choice at the general election.

Along with the abolition of the convention system and the establishment of direct nominations the States of South Dakota, Oregon, Montana, Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Texas, and Maine have reestablished a system whereby the people can ballot directly on public questions, thereby restoring majority rule which existed in each of the thirteen original States from 1776 until about 1844, when the convention system was debased.

Again in these States the representatives in the legislature are the people's agents and not their rulers. The people are the ruling power.

RESULTS OF THE PEOPLE'S RULE IN OREGON, 1904–1908—MIGHTY OPPOSITION BY SPECIAL-PRIVILEGE CORPORATIONS.

The results in Oregon since the reestablishment of the people's rule in 1904 have been along the same lines as when the people ruled during the first 75 years of our national existence, namely, equal rights before the law are being established—legal privileges are being abolished. The telephone and telegraph corporations, along with other legal-privilege corporations, are being compelled to pay their fair share of the taxes, which for years they have evaded. They are resisting and have come before this court and are asking you to overthrow the people's rule by declaring that direct legislation in combination with representative government is an unrepublican form of government. Following are the exact words:

"The question is submitted with confidence that the courts of this country will protect the people in the enjoyment of those constitutional checks and safeguards against their own power which with wisdom and deliberation they created for themselves. Injustice and misrule have characterized all unconstitutional democracies and all popular governments administered in accordance with the whims and caprices of the multitude (majority rule)."

"It is in the power of the courts to maintain and preserve this Government against the attack of direct legislation and the absolutism of numbers (majority rule)." (Defendant's brief, pp. 147, 148.)

The special privilege corporations of this country realize that the restoration of the people's rule will result in "equal rights to all, special privileges to none" and therefore these corporations are opposing the change. What they will be able eventually to accomplish no man can say; but the duty of the American judges is as clear as noonday. Republican ideals are to be upheld and arguments for the establishment of an oligarchy through judicial legislation are to be rejected.

Following is President Roosevelt's description of the mighty contest for the maintenance of republican institutions. In his inaugural address he said:

"Our relations with the other powers of the world are important, but still more important are our relations among ourselves. Such growth in wealth, in population, and in power as this Nation has seen during the century and a quarter of its national life is inevitably accompanied by a like growth in the problems which are ever before every nation that rises to greatness. Power invariably means both responsibility and danger. Our forefathers faced certain perils which we have outgrown. We now face other perils, the very existence of which it was impossible that they should foresee. Modern life is both complex and intense, and the tremendous changes wrought by the extraordinary industrial development of the half century are felt in every fiber of our social and political being. Never before have men tried so vast and formidable an experiment as that of administering the affairs of a continent under the forms of a democratic republic. The conditions which have told for our marvelous material well-being, which have developed to a very high degree our energy, self-reliance, and individual initiative, also have wrought the care and anxiety inseparable from the accumulation of great wealth in industrial centers. Upon the success of our experiment much depends, not only as regards our own welfare, but as regards the welfare of mankind. If we fail the cause of free self-government throughout the world will rock to its foundations, and therefore our responsibility is heavy, to ourselves, to the world as it is to-day, and to the generations yet unborn. There is no good reason why we should fear the future, but there is every reason why we should face it seriously, neither hiding from ourselves the gravity of the problems before us nor fearing to approach these problems with the unbending, unflinching purpose to solve them aright.

"Yet, after all, though the problems are new, though the tasks set before us differ from the tasks set before our fathers who founded and preserved this Republic, the spirit in which these tasks must be undertaken and these problems faced, if our duty is to be well done, remains essentially unchanged. We know that self-government is difficult. We know that no people needs such high traits of character as that people which seeks to govern its affairs aright through the freely expressed will of the free men who compose it. But we have faith that we shall not prove false to the memories of the men of the mighty past. They did their work; they left us the splendid heritage we now enjoy. We in our turn have an assured confidence that we shall be able to leave this heritage unwasted and enlarged to our children and our children's children.

"To do so we must show, not merely in great cities, but in the everyday affairs of life, the qualities of practical intelligence, of courage, of hardihood and endurance, and, above all, the power of devotion to a lofty ideal, which made great the men who founded this Republic in the days of Washington, which made great the men who preserved this Republic in the days of Abraham Lincoln."

ORDER FOR A RECESS.

During the delivery of Mr. OWEN'S speech,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to ask unanimous consent that the Senate take a recess until half past 9 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President I can not yield for that purpose now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I mean at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I yield for that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma the Senate stand in recess until 9.30 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS subsequently said: Mr. President, twice while I was in the Chamber the request was made that immediately after the completion of his speech by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] we should take a recess, and twice I objected. I stepped into the cloakroom for a second, and in my absence the request was renewed, and I understand it was granted. I suppose I have no right to complain; I shall not complain; I shall plead no "baby act" in connection with it; but it strikes me that that is not the usual procedure in the Senate. I was not informed that the request would be made the third time. I objected to it twice, and every Senator knew that I was going to object to it.

Mr. OWEN resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator submit to an interruption for a moment?

Mr. OWEN. I must not yield for another interruption. I hope the Senator will not ask to interrupt me again, especially for a motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to make a motion. I merely want to make a statement.

Mr. OWEN. Very well; I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. CATRON. I should like to have it understood that the Senator's speech is not to be interrupted to allow anything else to intervene.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I made a statement a moment ago which was doubted. I have gotten a verification of it from another Senator. The Senator from Utah has gone down and has seen the conferees and has ascertained that the statement that I made was abundantly sustained. What has been done by the conference committee was to reduce certain salaries from $2,250 to $1,800, to reduce other salaries from $1,800 to $1,200, to reduce the chief clerk from $1,600 to $1,200, and to continue the assay offices to the end of the fiscal year. So the statement I made was even less than the facts justified. I said they continued them, but had abolished certain offices. It now seems that they have not abolished any of the offices, but have merely reduced the salaries of the officers. I hope that will be satisfactory to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. So far as that amendment is concerned, I will say that both my colleague and myself have acquiesced, under pressure, in these reductions simply in order not to put the Senate to inconvenience, in the expectation that at the next session this wrong will be remedied. What we objected to was that the House proposed, practically, by this legislation to nullify provisions on the statute books authorizing the assay offices and fixing the salaries, and they practically in that way sought to abolish the assay offices.

As to the statement of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I think that he will find, if he refers to the RECORD, that the statement that he made, the accuracy of which I questioned simply because I questioned the accuracy of his information, was not a statement similar to this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My statement was stronger than this. I said that they had abolished certain of the salaries. It seems that they have abolished none, but simply reduced them.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is all.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me to present a conference report?

Mr. OWEN. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. WARREN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know the Senator from Oklahoma had the floor.

Mr. OWEN. I do not want the present consideration of any conference report.

Mr. PENROSE. There is no objection to it.

Mr. OWEN. I can not yield any more.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say to the Senator that this is the closing up of the legislative bill.

Mr. OWEN. Very well. The reason I made that suggestion was because the Senator from New Mexico requested that I should not yield to a conference report on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will yield, that I may present the conference report on the legislative bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I think that will be perfectly agreeable to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GAMBLE. I observe the Senator from New Mexico is here. Should there be a yielding to one conference report and not to another?

Mr. WARREN and Mr. FALL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I present the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. Mr. President, there is quite an amount of reading in the report, and, unless some Senator asks that the report be read, I desire to say this is what we agreed to before, with a reduction of some members of the police force. The assay office in Nevada is restored. The matter of appropriations for all the assay offices is extended for the entire year, but at somewhat reduced salaries for the officers. There is nothing in the failure to appropriate that carries with it any idea of abolishing the assay offices.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for a vote on the adoption of the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 61, 68, 82, 83, 84, 139, 148, 149, 151, 152, 154, 155, 160, 161, 162, 163, 179, and 235.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 7, 8, 11, 37, 38, 39, 147, 180, 181, and 190, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Mint at Carson, Nev.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, $1,200, in all, $4,200."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 78, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office at Boise, Idaho: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,200."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 85, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office at Deadwood, S. Dak.: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; clerk, $1,000; assistant assayer, $1,200; assayer's assistant, $1,000; in all, $5,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 87, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office at Helena, Mont.: Assayer in charge, $1,800; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,400; assistant assayer, $1,200; assayer's assistant, $1,000; in all, $5,400."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 89, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Assay office at Salt Lake City, Utah: Assayer in charge, who shall also perform the duties of melter, $1,800; assistant assayer, $1,200; chief clerk, who shall also perform the duties of cashier, $1,200; in all, $4,200."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 94, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 95, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows. In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 150, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$232,210"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "nine"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "78,740"; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
GEORGE PEABODY WETMORE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. B. JOHNSON,
A. S. BURLESON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. OWEN resumed his speech.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. FALL. I simply want to place myself right with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. GAMBLE].

Mr. OWEN. I was not referring to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] but to his colleague [Mr. CATRON], who wanted to go and get a little needed rest.

Mr. FALL. That is all; I wanted that statement made for the benefit of the Senator, who seemed to think I had possibly taken advantage of him during his absence.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FALL in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I had better explain before I ask the permission of the Senator from Oklahoma. I want to say now that I shall take occasion to speak about the agreement to take a recess at the conclusion of the Senator's speech.

After the conclusion of Mr. OWEN'S speech,

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Oklahoma has concluded, nothing is in order but the taking of the recess.

Mr. OWEN. I have concluded.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. By unanimous consent——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then I suggest that we have not a quorum.

Mr. PENROSE. There is nothing in order, Mr. President, but a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma having concluded, under the unanimous-consent agreement the Chair will hold that there is nothing in order except the recess. The Senate is in recess until half past 9 o'clock.

Thereupon (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes a. m., Tuesday), the Senate took a recess until 9.30 o'clock a. m., Tuesday, March 4, 1913.

(Continuation of legislative day of Saturday, March 1, 1913.)

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 9.30 o'clock a. m.

MINOR MERIWETHER.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 8348) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Minor Meriwether, jr., as amended, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, waived for one year in the case of Minor Meriwether, jr., in consideration of his previous naval service.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

[Mr. ESTOPINAL addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. I have 10,000 young men in my district who are also strong and able bodied, and some of whom would like to have good, fat jobs. But, Mr. Speaker, out of deference to my friend from Louisiana, I will not occupy the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

STEAMBOAT-INSPECTION SERVICE, LOS ANGELES.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 8429) to create a board of local inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, for the port of Los Angeles, Cal., and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules, to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 8429, and to pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting in the first paragraph thereof, after the words "New Orleans, La.," and before the words "Juneau, Alaska," the words "Los Angeles, Cal."; and that the said section be further amended by inserting in the fifth paragraph thereof, after the words "Portland, Me.," and before the words "Juneau, Alaska," the words "Los Angeles, Cal."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to establish at Los Angeles, Cal., a board of local inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service. The city of Los Angeles has approximately 450,000 inhabitants. Into Los Angeles Harbor last year there came more than 4,100 coastwise vessels subject to United States inspection and 118,000 seamen, a large part of whom, as ships' officers, with various responsibilities, are required to pass Government examinations. There is no inspection board nearer than San Francisco, 500 miles distant. The establishing of this board at Los Angeles will prove of great convenience to the shipowners and shipbuilders in and about Los Angeles Harbor and to hundreds of owners and officers on the four to five thousand coastwise vessels now entering our harbor. It will also prove an economy to the Government. The Department of Commerce and Labor, the Supervising Inspector General, and the inspector at San Francisco have all recommended it. Both Senators from California, one of whom lives near San Francisco, are strongly favorable. Indeed, I know of no one opposed to this measure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that San Pedro is a port of entry of Los Angeles?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. It is, and San Pedro is all within the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And on the other side there is the port of entry of Santa Monica.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. There are several ports of entry within a few miles of this harbor.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this officially classed as Los Angeles port of entry or San Pedro or Santa Monica?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. It is officially known as the port of Los Angeles, and Santa Monica, Venice, Long Beach, and Redondo are all subports of entry to Los Angeles.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And this would provide for all those different ports?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Yes; and for many others. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I will.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it now, there is no board of inspection in the Steamboat Service south of San Francisco.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. That is right.

Mr. MANN. How much would the expense be to the Government for the board at Los Angeles if this bill passes?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that it is believed that the expense will not be very much, if any, greater.

Mr. MANN. I know, but that is not the question I asked. How much will the expense be at Los Angeles?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. About $5,000 per annum. But this amount will be exceeded if the Inspection Service is to be performed in the old way, for additional inspectors will be needed at San Francisco, and a much larger traveling expense made necessary by the wonderfully growing shipping industry at and near Los Angeles.

Mr. MANN. Well, they send inspectors now from San Francisco to Los Angeles.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Of course there is some expense growing out of that for traveling expense and subsistence.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. One hundred dollars every time they go to Los Angeles. It takes two inspectors, one for hulls and one for boilers.

Mr. MANN. I see the supervising inspector of the district says that, if necessary to visit it two or three times a week, they send inspectors down there at the expense of $300 per week. They are certainly guilty of gross extravagance if they send down inspectors two or three times a week at an expense of $300 a week.

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the inspection bureau at San Francisco is trying to accommodate the service on the Pacific coast as best it can. The Craig Shipbuilding Co. now have in operation a large shipbuilding plant at Long Beach, near Los Angeles. Last year four or five good-sized steamships were built by this company. This year it will build more than that, and in addition will construct two submarines for the United States Government.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman believes from his knowledge of the subject that the expenses of this board at Los Angeles will practically be no more than the expenses now incurred by sending inspectors from San Francisco to Los Angeles?

Mr. STEPHENS of California. I feel sure the next three years will prove this an economical thing for the Government to have done.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 25780) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. ROOT, and Mr. PAYNTER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23673. An act to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen.

CHARLES DUDLEY DALY.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 7747, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act for the relief of Charles Dudley Daly.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MANN. I demand a second, and I will make a point of no quorum if that bill is coming up.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] will withdraw it, the Chair will recognize him first after we get a quorum.

Mr. PETERS. All right, Mr. Speaker.

RELATIONS WITH THE PHILIPPINES (H. DOC. NO. 1446).

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute, as doubt is entertained of the presence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, Cardinal Gibbons is not only a very distinguished prelate but he is a very eminent statesman as well. He has had occasion to devote very deep and discriminating study to the subject of our relations to the Philippines, a proposition which will be one of difficulty and importance in the next Congress. Some time ago he submitted to an interview, which is a contribution of peculiar value, in my opinion, to the American people. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Reserving the right to object, I just wanted to make this suggestion to the gentleman. I have no doubt in the world that this is a valuable contribution. It would be of much more benefit to the House if the gentleman would have it printed as a document, so that we could get it, as we do other documents, and have it bound.

Mr. KENDALL. I am inclined to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi. If there be no objection, I modify my request and ask that the interview with Cardinal Gibbons be printed as a House document also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[House Document No. 1446, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

Retention of the Philippines.

(Article by Cardinal Gibbons for the retention of the Philippines.)

CARDINAL FOR RETENTION OF PHILIPPINES—OPPOSES ANY PLAN FOR PRESENT OR FUTURE INDEPENDENCE AT FIXED TIME—NOT YET READY FOR SELF-GOVERNMENT—SAYS FOR UNITED STATES TO ABANDON PLAIN DUTY WOULD IMPERIL CHRISTIAN CIVILIZATION.

Cardinal Gibbons, in an interview with James T. Williams, jr., editor in chief of the Boston Evening Transcript, which appears in that paper recently, expresses his firm opposition to any declaration regarding the independence of the Philippine Islands in the near future.

He takes the ground that the Philippine problem is in no sense a partisan question, but belongs to the whole American people. His eminence declares that a "scuttle" policy in the islands would be a dishonorable act, and is firm in his belief that the American people will never stand for such a policy.

FAVORS INVESTIGATION.

Before making any change in the Philippine policy of the Government, the cardinal suggests that the President be authorized by Congress to appoint a commission to investigate conditions in the islands at first hand, so that its recommendations with respect to the future be based upon observations on the ground.

In his interview the cardinal said:

"The future of the Philippine Islands is a problem that belongs to the whole American people. At no time should it be considered from the standpoint of partisanship. To its solution the best thought of the country should be devoted, and the efforts of our Government in that direction deserve the loyal support of all Americans without regard to creed, religious or political. The orderly progress and development of the Filipinos and their education in the difficult science of self-government under the wise and benevolent policy pursued by this Nation since the American occupation is threatened by the proposal to commit the Government to abandon those islands at a fixed time in the future—and that only a few years away.

CAN NOT PUT DUTY ASIDE.

"Those islands were taken as a war measure. Some may think it would have been better for us never to have exercised our jurisdiction over them, but once American sovereignty was established in that archipelago, the responsibility for the welfare and development of the Filipinos devolved upon the American people, and upon their shoulders it rests today. I am irrevocably opposed to any proposal that would commit this Nation to a scuttle policy in the Philippine Islands—to-day, to-morrow, or at any fixed time in the future—and I say this wholly in the interest of the social, material, and moral advancement of the people of the United States, of whom I am proud to be a fellow citizen, no less than of the Filipinos themselves.

"In the first place, I maintain that the Filipinos—the vast majority of them, at any rate—have never been consulted regarding their independence. The islands composing the archipelago number more than 3,000 and are widely scattered. The people of one island have little or no relation with the inhabitants of another. No attempt has been made to ascertain the views of these segregated groups upon the question so vital to them as to whether they shall be turned adrift to shift for themselves. There has been no plebescite, and it would require days and weeks for them to gather and register their opinions on the subject.

"Up to the present moment the Filipinos have no conception of the honor and responsibility which it is now proposed to thrust upon them. I hold it to be unreasonable in the extreme to impose both upon men who have not even been consulted as to their wishes and have no adequate conception of the duties and responsibilities involved in giving them their independence.

NOT READY FOR FREEDOM.

"But even could it be demonstrated that a large number of Filipinos desired that independence, in my judgment the inhabitants of those islands as a whole are utterly unprepared to shoulder the responsibility which independence will place upon them. Some authorities give the number of those capable of reading and writing as not more than 5 per cent. Nor have more than 3 per cent an adequate idea of the duties required of those charged with self-government.

"It took 300 years to civilize and Christianize the Filipinos. The entire population is estimated at 8,000,000, of whom 7,000,000 are Christians and 1,000,000 are Moros and Mohammedans. If we were to withdraw now, it is much to be feared that these people would lapse into a state of barbarous infidelity, and thus undo the work of 300 years. It must be remembered that there are constant uprisings in the islands; that the fierce and warlike Moros continue to invade the different islands and keep their inhabitants in a state of constant turmoil and bloodshed. The missionaries there now, while willing to sacrifice their lives in the discharge of their sacred duty, are powerless unless they be sustained by the strong arm of the United States Government to enforce law and order.

"Evidence of the bloodthirstiness of the Moros comes to us with depressing frequency. Their attacks upon the United States troops and upon their law-abiding fellow countrymen continue from time to time, and only recently an American officer and several scouts were ruthlessly massacred by these men. How helpless would be the peace-loving Filipinos against the Moros' uprisings were the worthy protecting hand of the United States withdrawn!

WOULD IMPERIL INDUSTRY.

"To withdraw from the Philippines at a fixed time in the future, regardless of conditions in those islands, would work a serious injustice to the many Americans and far-seeing citizens of other countries who have invested their money in developing the resources of those islands. These investments have been made on the assumption that the Philippines would continue under our protection indefinitely.

"For the United States to reverse its repeatedly declared policy with respect to these islands would, in my earnest belief, be a dishonorable act. It would work great harm to those investors, as well as to the Filipinos themselves, for this country to withdraw and witness a resultant reign of anarchy. It should be borne in mind that the development of those islands is essential to the development of the Filipinos. Many capitalists are disposed by an enlightened self-interest to invest their capital in the building of railroads and in the development of the mines and other resources of the archipelago, a development that, I repeat, would contribute vastly to the interest and welfare of the Filipinos; but these investors are not willing to enter upon such enterprises unless given the guarantee of permanent law and order in those islands which can alone come under the benevolent protection and guidance that has characterized the American occupation.

ENCOMIUMS FOR TAFT.

"I speak upon this Philippine problem with the interest and sincerity of an American citizen, proud of the record there made by our Government in colonial administration and hopeful of the beneficent results which, with the patriotic pursuance of that policy, the future will bring. Nor do I speak without information. I have been in frequent conferences with the President upon this problem, which is so near to his heart. No citizen of the United States is better equipped with information on the conditions in those islands than President Taft. He is a man of close observation, judicial temperament, and entirely disinterested, save as every American should be interested in seeing his country do well the task set before it.

"In his efforts on behalf of the common welfare of those islands and of the United States, Mr. Taft has shown unselfish courage and patience of a rare order. He was their governor general and had ample opportunity to study the character and mental and moral qualifications of the Filipinos and to judge of their capacity for self-government. I have also recently conferred with the present governor general, Mr. Cameron Forbes, a gentleman who rightly enjoys the esteem and confidence of America, and especially of the people of his native State of Massachusetts. In addition, I have conferred with many private citizens who have spent considerable time in those islands, and for many years I have been in constant touch with the Philippine people through correspondence with the bishops and clergy among them.

"All are unanimous in their deprecations of the early autonomy of those islands; all are emphatic in their opposition to the fixing of any definite or indefinite time when the Filipinos might be capable of self-government; all are among the best friends the Filipinos have.

SHOULD INVESTIGATE FIRST.

"If another step in the policy of leading and helping the Filipinos to deserve through increasing capacity a larger measure of self-government is to be taken, let us go about the matter with deliberation. In my opinion the wisest step in this direction would be for the President, in his wisdom and discretion, to select a committee of discreet and observant patriotic citizens to visit various portions of the islands. Thus would they be enabled to form their judgment upon observations made at first hand as to the time when the Filipinos may have the ability and education to assume a larger measure of self-government than this Nation is warranted by conditions to-day in promising them. To hold out a promise to them that we could not keep would be no less dishonorable than to shirk our obligation toward them.

"I have no patience with the argument that the Philippine Islands are the source of an annual deficit to this country. Even were that true, the fact would not warrant a cowardly abandonment of the clear and accepted duty of the American people toward the Filipinos. Surely as a nation we owe that much to the world and to ourselves; we owe it to the cause of peace and good order the world over. But I am credibly informed that those islands are self-supporting and that the only item in which the expenditures exceed the receipts is in the difference of cost between maintaining an army there and at home. Certainly that difference is not worthy of consideration by a nation of our resources and of our large responsibilities to the world.

DISTANCE NO ARGUMENT.

"Objection is raised against our continuing to rule a people 8,000 miles away. In answer I would say that when we acquired California in 1847 President Polk is said to have remarked that a territory so far removed from what was then the United States would be a doubtful possession. We know now how fallacious was his reasoning. Although the Philippine Islands are so far removed from us geographically, it is easier for us to-day to reach Manila than it was 60 years ago to go from New York to San Francisco, and, in fact, it might be said that we are in hourly communication with the islands by cable.

WOULD MEAN ANARCHY.

"On many sides of us to-day we see republics torn with chronic revolutions—Liberia, San Domingo, Cuba, and last, but by no means least, Mexico. For those revolutions this Nation is not responsible. I hold that it would be a grave mistake to add another to that group, and one for which as a nation the United States would be wholly responsible. The world at large would hold us responsible, not only for the setting up of such a republic but for the disorder that would follow the thrusting upon a people, unprepared for the responsibility involved, of independence and so-called self-government.

"Now that the United States, through a considerable period of years, has with patience and a firm and steady purpose assumed the responsibility before the world of administering the affairs of the Philippine Islands, I am very firmly of the belief that it would be a national dishonor, harmful to all concerned, for this Government to surrender the Filipinos to the tender mercies of a neighboring power or to turn them adrift wholly unprepared to face the future as an independent people; to give them up in such a way would be like a mother abandoning a helpless child, or like a father withdrawing counsel and control from a son who had not yet come to years of discretion. I am hopeful of the future of the Philippine people because I have confidence that the American people will never stand for a 'scuttle' policy in those islands."

RURAL CREDITS IN EUROPE.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 132 and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe.

Whereas the Department of State of the United States detailed, upon the application of the Southern Commercial Congress, David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, to direct a conference on agricultural finance, held under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress in Nashville, Tenn., April 1 to 6; and

Whereas 27 States were represented through delegates in the conference; and

Whereas resolutions were unanimously adopted providing for an American commission to go abroad for the investigation of rural credits in Europe; and

Whereas the Southern Commercial Congress will send the commission abroad, composed of delegates from all States of the United States, to report to the International Institute of Agriculture (which under treaty is supported by the Government of the United States), at the time of the meeting of the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, May, 1913: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Congress of the United States, in recognition of the valuable service to be rendered the United States in the investigation of the European systems of agricultural finance, hereby indorses the proposed American commission and invokes for it the diplomatic consideration of the countries to be included in the itinerary.

Also the following amendment was read:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert the following:

"That the Secretary of State be authorized and requested to bespeak for the proposed American commission to investigate the European system of rural credits the diplomatic courtesies of the various European Governments."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand, and I wish to ask the gentleman about it, that the motion proposes to amend the joint resolution so that instead of providing that Congress shall invoke the diplomatic consideration of countries abroad it authorizes the Secretary of State to do that in the usual diplomatic manner.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and agreeing to the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution was agreed to.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION, ETC.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 27789, as amended by the paper which I send to the Clerk's desk, which is really a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute. What is the number of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. The number of the bill is H. R. 27789, but the Clerk has the substitute for it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized to establish, provide, or improve the following aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, under the Department of Commerce and Labor, in accordance with the respective limits of cost hereinafter respectively set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded.

To construct and equip a lighthouse tender for general service at a cost not exceeding $250,000.

FIRST LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

To construct and equip a light vessel to be placed near Monhegan Island, off the entrance to Penobscot Bay, Me., at a cost not to exceed $125,000.

THIRD LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

To erect a carpenter shop at the general lighthouse depot, Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., at a cost not exceeding $23,000.

SIXTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Purchase of a site and construction of a wharf and buildings, and purchase of the necessary equipment, so far as funds may permit, for a depot for the sixth lighthouse district, at a cost not to exceed $125,000.

EIGHTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Aids to navigation in Atchafalaya Entrance Channel, La., at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

To construct and equip a light vessel for the Southwest Pass Entrances to the Mississippi River, La., at a cost not to exceed $125,000.

NINTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Light station on Navassa Island, in the West Indies, at a cost not to exceed $125,000.

Purchase for lighthouse purposes of approximately one-half acre of land in the vicinity of the lighthouse reservation at Port Ferro Light Station, P. R., for the purpose of constructing a watershed and cistern, and the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," for the fiscal year in which the purchase is effected, is hereby made available for the purchase of said site.

TENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Rearrangement, rebuilding, and improvement of the aids to navigation at Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio, at a cost not to exceed $45,000.

Removal, reconstruction, and improvement of the fog-signal station at Cleveland, Ohio, at a cost not to exceed $17,000.

Light and fog-signal station and improvement of aids to navigation at Lorain Harbor, Ohio, at a cost not to exceed $35,000.

ELEVENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Additional aids to navigation at Ashland, Wis., at a cost not to exceed $25,000.

A pierhead light and lighted buoy at Oconto Harbor, Wis., at a cost not to exceed $5,000.

TWELFTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Establishment of aids to navigation in the harbor of Manistique, Mich., at a cost not to exceed $20,000.

SIXTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Light and fog signal at or near Cape St. Elias, Alaska, at a cost not to exceed $115,000.

SEVENTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

Aids to navigation and improvements of existing aids in Puget Sound and adjacent waters, Wash., at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

Improvement of Warrior Rock Light Station, Columbia River, Oreg., including the purchase of additional land at a cost not to exceed $2,000.

EIGHTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

To authorize the completion of the unfinished portion of the Government road from Rollerville to the Point Arena Lighthouse, Mendocino County, Cal., at a cost not to exceed $3,000.

For establishing a light and fog-signal station on or near North Farallon Island, Cal., $100,000.

Hereafter the purchase of necessary additional land for light stations and depots is authorized under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor: Provided, That no single acquisition of such additional land shall cost in excess of $500.

Hereafter supplies and equipment for special works of the Lighthouse Service may be furnished from general stock and the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," reimbursed therefor from the respective appropriations for special works.

Hereafter when any condemned supplies, materials, equipment, or land can not be profitably used in the work of the Lighthouse Service the same shall be appraised and sold, either by sealed proposals for the purchase of the same or by public auction after advertisement of the sale for such time as in the judgment of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor the public interests require, the proceeds of such sales, after the payment therefrom of the expenses of making the sales, to be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts as now provided for by law in like cases.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] demands a second.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be regarded as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has 20 minutes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to consume all the time unless it is rendered necessary by questions.

I will say that early last session the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce took up for consideration the recommendations of the Department of Commerce and Labor and prepared an omnibus lighthouse bill, but gentlemen around the House suggested that it was too large to pass, and we cut it down to a bare emergency bill, and passed that emergency bill. But in answer to numerous questions asked by various Members of the House, it was stated by me on this floor, with the acquiescence of all the leaders, as I understood it on both sides, that this bill should be passed at this session.

That emergency bill went to the Senate and the Senate placed on it nearly all of the provisions that the department had recommended. In conference your conferees, faithful to the orders of the House and their pledges to the Members of the House, rejected all of those amendments and brought back the bill, with few exceptions, as the House passed it.

We did not at this session press the bill which gentlemen on the floor said was too large. The Senate, however, passed a bill of substantially the same size, carrying about $1,800,000, but we declined to bring up that bill. We prepared a substitute containing those aids to navigation, which are urgently needed and to which there appeared to be no objection, and this substitute, we are assured, will be acceptable to the other branch of Congress. We have been so assured by that committee. There is nothing in it, we believe, that is not a matter of necessity, and we hope that the bill, now reduced to moderate proportions and doing nothing except to provide for the actual needs of the service, will be speedily passed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] has 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] desired to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia will give his attention. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to catechize him. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. I shall try to give the gentleman my attention, and if he asks me questions that I can not answer I will do as the little Sunday school boy did and say, "I do not know." [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to catechize the gentleman along biblical lines.

Mr. ADAMSON. I think I shall not have to say "I do not know," if the gentleman will get into that field—so novel for him. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to get the gentleman's biblical history confused with the facts. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. I will answer anything that the gentleman propounds concerning history, sacred or profane. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was every Senate amendment cut out in conference on the emergency bill at the last session?

Mr. ADAMSON. Everything except the lightships.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I notice that the fourth lighthouse district is not considered in this bill at all.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is in error. The committee did consider it very carefully, and we did not disregard it until we were compelled to in order to get the bill passed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says that necessary projects only are authorized in the bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman misunderstood my statement. I said those left in the bill are absolutely necessary. There are many others of great necessity, but, as Bill Acklin told the eel, when the eel wriggled off his hook, "There will be more days than one," and we hope other necessary projects will be provided for in the near future.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to incur the gentleman's displeasure, and I would not——

Mr. ADAMSON. I love the gentleman like a brother and love to answer his questions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know that; but I am doing the best I can to draw the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Goose Islands Flats light in the fourth district has not been provided for in this bill, and that it is needed along a stretch of territory along navigable water which has very scant aids to navigation for 14 miles. This is a very urgent matter, because vessels run ashore on those flats in the Delaware River. I understand there was a Senate amendment, and I wanted to understand whether it was considered by the committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. I admit everything the gentleman says about the importance of that light, and if it were in my power I would amend the bill and put it in. I have tried my best to get some arrangement by which we could include other items in this bill, but it is just as big as we can possibly get through both Houses at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman at this time admits the merit of that project, I am satisfied.

Mr. ADAMSON. I admit the merit of this and of half a million dollars' worth of others that we could not get into this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman about a few matters in this bill.

A few years ago, on the reorganization of the Lighthouse Service, I noticed that where there had been two inspectors before in each district there was after the reorganization only one I pector in the district, and it was stated then that the Lighthouse Bureau would have a surplus of tenders. Now comes in a proposition for a new lighthouse tender. The expense of the maintenance of a lighthouse tender is in the neighborhood of $40,000 to $50,000 a year, without considering repairs. I am sorry the gentleman from Georgia is having his attention diverted by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] in a private conversation, so that he has not heard what I said.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will pardon the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MANN. I presume the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is trying to get additional propositions into this bill, because the lighthouse district represented by the gentleman from Washington will never be satisfied until it has a lighthouse every few hundred feet along the coast, both of the Pacific and the Sound.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman will yield, I thank him for the compliment; but I have not asked for any addition to the bill. I certainly would not hesitate to do so, however.

Mr. MANN. Ever since the gentleman from Washington has been a Member of the House he has been continuously and persistently asking for additional aids to navigation on his coast, and although we have granted more there than for any other similar area in the United States, he is still unsatisfied, and has a large number of requests now in.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Washington for diverting the attack of the gentleman from Illinois from me. I thought he got up to "jump" on me.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. I rose for the purpose of acquiring some of the large and valued information which is always lodged in the head of my distinguished friend from Georgia, to see if I could extract some of it for the benefit of the House. I will ask the gentleman what is the need for this new lighthouse tender?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the author of this bill and the gentleman who directed its preparation has come in, and having performed as far as is necessary, I will now refer the gentleman from Illinois to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, although I shall be glad to hear the answer of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON], it is not necessary for any member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce—the greatest committee of this House, and, in my judgment, the most important committee of the House—to refer any subject to any other member of the committee for information, because every member of that committee is always filled with information concerning any subject reported from the committee.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman from Illinois will permit an interruption, I have an illustrious precedent for the course I have taken. Under a former administration when the gentleman from Illinois, the great minority leader [Mr. MANN], was a high private in the rear rank, the chairman of the committee very often delegated to him not only the management of bills on the floor, but the preparation of bills, and I am proud to say that there are a number of able gentlemen on the present committee to whom the chairman can safely delegate such questions to handle bills on the floor.

Mr. MANN. I do not question that; I believe every member of that committee is quite capable of handling any bill on the floor of the House. I would be glad to have the gentleman from Maryland give to the House the reasons why we should have a new lighthouse tender. I understand perfectly well that we lost a tender during the last year, but also that we had a surplus of tenders at the beginning of the year. Now, do not tell me that it is because they lost a tender; tell me what became of the surplus tenders.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be a difference of opinion between the former chairman of the committee and the gentleman to whom has been intrusted the management of the Lighthouse Bureau. The Commissioner of Lighthouses came before the committee and said that by reason of the loss of the lighthouse tender Armenia in Alaskan waters there was a necessity for a new tender. I can not assume the responsibility of saying whether the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the last Congress or Commissioner Putnam of the Lighthouse Bureau is the best expert, but I do know that the Armenia was the only tender in Pacific waters available for Alaskan work, and that vessel should be replaced. The remaining tenders are vessels of about 600 tons, while the Armenia was a vessel of 1,000 tons. It takes a stanch tender of at least that much tonnage to do the Alaskan work.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's answer is that the commissioner says they need the tender, and that settles it with the committee.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have but a few moments.

Mr. COVINGTON. I want to say one thing more.

Mr. MANN. The next item in this bill is to provide a light vessel to be placed near Monhegan Island. That is off the coast of Maine. It costs a large sum of money every year to maintain a light vessel. The distinguished Senator from Maine who has passed away—Senator Frye—was for many years the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, and had jurisdiction over providing additional aids to navigation. With all due respect and affection for his memory and his services, I have come to believe that there was no place off the coast of Maine which the distinguished Senator had not been able to provide for.

Yet the first lighthouse bill that comes in after he is gone beyond contains a provision for a new light vessel off the coast of Maine. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, who is well acquainted with Maine from early life, to tell why we need a new light vessel.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to tell the gentleman very briefly. In the very last bill which passed three years ago Senator Frye was one of the conferees, and the bill contained this provision. The conferees on the part of the House objected to this provision, then. The Senate conferees, with Senator Frye at the head, agreed that we would first try a cheaper method of lighting with acetylene buoys, but if it was unsatisfactory and unsafe to navigation interests, they ought to be replaced by a light vessel.

That has been tried; the navigation interests are opposed to acetylene buoys on the ground that they are not only unsatisfactory but unsafe, and for that reason we have deemed it necessary to go back to the original provision for a lightship. It is asked for because it is the only safe way to light a dangerous coast.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has given the explanation, but during my long service the distinguished Senator never suggested nor did the marine interests suggest a light vessel at this place.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The gentleman will find the provision in the bill three years ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, I want to enlighten the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who wanted to know what became of the old tenders on the Pacific coast after they got through with them. I can tell the gentleman what they do with the old tenders on the Lakes; they send them to the Atlantic coast.

Mr. MANN. After we get through with an old vessel, worn out in the active service on the stormy waters of the Lakes, the proper place to send them is to the sweet, dead town of Philadelphia, where there are no storms and no troubles.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is where they come.

Mr. MANN. When they get dead and asleep, that is where they belong. I would like to ask the gentleman with reference to the last two items in the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that, I want to ask him a question. The gentleman has spoken of the late Senator Frye, of Maine, and his activities in making provision on the coast of Maine for those things that came under his eye and within his knowledge. I would like to know whether other members on the committee in the Senate, and also members of a like committee in the House, have been as industrious in providing for the needs that came under their eyes and close observation, even though they happened to be in their own State.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has never missed an opportunity to get an aid to navigation wherever it was needed in his district. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, that is so, because I never have applied for a lightship of any kind or a light in my district.

Mr. MANN. Because the gentleman could not use one.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I think we have some ports on the lake that are quite important.

Mr. MADDEN. I suggest that the most of the lights in the gentleman's district are on public buildings.

Mr. PAYNE. Possibly.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the chief light in the gentleman's district is the distinguished gentleman himself. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to rest under any false accusations. There have never been any lights in my district in the last 30 years placed there as aids to navigation, because they have never been asked for.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask in reference to the last two items in this bill. They came into the House the other day on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and, to myself and other Members of the House, seemed proper items, but when those two items were reached on the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill the distinguished gentleman from somewhere, representing the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, promptly raised a point of order and had them stricken out of the bill.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I am the person who made the point of order, and it was sustained.

Mr. MANN. The only reason that can be offered for that was that the gentleman thought they were improper items. Having had them stricken out when there was surely a chance for their passage, the gentleman now proposes to insert them in this bill. Why this change of heart?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, they had been inserted in this bill for some six months.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has six minutes remaining.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to give any reason?

Mr. COVINGTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry that I have propounded a question that the gentleman does not seem able to answer.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I did make the point of order to which the gentleman refers, and I can answer his question satisfactorily to this House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield the gentleman from Maryland any time?

Mr. COVINGTON. The gentleman from Georgia has yielded me the remainder of his time; but, Mr. Speaker, I am answering the question in the time of the gentleman from Illinois who has asked me regarding a point of order that I made to items on the sundry civil appropriation bill when that bill was on its passage in this House some days ago. It is a fact that the point of order referred to by the gentleman from Illinois was made, and it was made by me. It was made because the sundry civil bill, among other numerous items of general legislation which have no proper place on an appropriation bill, carried those particular items of general legislation for the lighthouse service, which have their proper place in the lighthouse bill we are now considering, and which was then on the Calendar of the House. For that reason, and for no other reason, I state very frankly to this House, I made the point of order, in order that this bill might retain its proper place and integrity.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COVINGTON. I can not answer the gentleman because I am answering an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want the gentleman to answer another question.

Mr. COVINGTON. If the gentleman from Illinois has no objection to yielding the time.

Mr. SHERLEY. I just desired to ask a question, and it will take only half a minute.

Mr. COVINGTON. If the gentleman from Illinois is content, very well.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is occupying his own time.

Mr. COVINGTON. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; I am answering a question of the gentleman from Illinois in the gentleman's time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all; the gentleman took the floor in his own right.

Mr. COVINGTON. Oh, no; I could not presume to waste that much time in my own time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says now he did not take the floor in his own right. He did, however.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the remainder of his time.

Mr. MANN. I did. The gentleman does not seem to know in whose time he is talking.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquired of the gentleman how he got the floor.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Maryland was answering a question of the gentleman from Illinois and explaining the bill, which he had in fact prepared.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but he also replied that the gentleman from Georgia yielded him the rest of his time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not the present parliamentary condition this, that the gentleman from Chicago has been caught asleep at the switch? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going to rule that the gentleman from Chicago ever got caught asleep at the switch. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman from Maryland desire to use any of his time?

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire now to use any of my time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Maryland said that the reason he raised the point of order on the two items when they were in the sundry civil bill was because when the items came in that bill there was no time for consideration. Now, the fact is that in the consideration of the sundry civil bill when those items were reached there was plenty of time for consideration, but now——

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield? I would like to correct an impression.

Mr. MANN. But now the gentleman proposes to suspend the rules and pass the bill when there is no time for consideration. The excuse offered by the gentleman will hardly wear.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman misunderstands the explanation which was offered.

Mr. MANN. I did not refer to the explanation of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. ADAMSON. I understand, but the gentleman misunderstood the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MANN. I did not; I heard him distinctly.

Mr. ADAMSON. He said it was general legislation, and therefore he made the point of order, and it was sustained on that ground.

Mr. MANN. He said that the reason he made the point of order was because it was not possible to receive consideration of the items in that bill, when, in fact, that is the only way they could receive consideration.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, perhaps the reason that he made the point of order was that the best things that are now in their bill we had in our bill, and they wanted those good things to carry along with the others they have got in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to congratulate the House upon its Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and upon its chairman. [Applause.] In my judgment, after some years' service, that committee is the most important legislative committee in either branch of Congress. [Applause.] They have done good service in this Congress, and I congratulate the members of that committee upon the service they have rendered to the House and to the country. [Applause.]

Mr. ADAMSON. And this is the best work we have done, and I hope it will pass unanimously.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question, if I may.

Mr. COVINGTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I have been unable to get a copy of the bill in its present shape, and I would like to ask the gentleman what provision it makes for a lightship at the mouth of the Mississippi River?

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman from Louisiana that the original draft of this bill carried with it two lightships for the Mississippi Passes, one of them for the South Pass and another for the Southwest Pass. In order to make this bill carry the smallest possible amount in authorizations we had the Commissioner of Lighthouses before the committee a few days ago, and he stated that there was now at the South Pass a lightship which for a year or two will probably answer the needs of navigation. There is also a lightship at Galveston, Tex., and with the additional lightship we have provided and which is to be placed at Southwest Pass of the Mississippi, the new pass which has just been completed by recent river and harbor legislation, there will be in existence the three lightships for the lightship service that are necessary on the Gulf of Mexico. Lightships occasionally have to be removed from their stations for repairs, however, and the additional lightship which was originally contemplated was for relief work in the Gulf district. We eliminated it to save money, believing that the service can wait a year or so for the authorization of the additional vessel. With the passage of this bill both channels at the mouth of the Mississippi will have lightships.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, only on the theory that half a loaf is better than no bread I accept the explanation offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MANN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER].

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, on January 18 last I introduced H. R. 28239, providing for the appointment of a commission to be known as the Labrador Current and Gulf Stream Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have received much favorable matter relating to it, but the pressure of business already before them has prevented its further consideration.

The subject is an investigation to be made upon the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, which can only be made during the summer and autumn months, and unless early favorable action can be had by Congress a delay of an entire year must ensue.

I intend introducing this bill into the next Congress at the earliest moment, and that this very interesting project may be properly before those who will consider it during the interim I desire to be heard, or in lieu of that privilege that my speech be ordered printed.

I would like to add that this bill has the support of our foremost thinkers in the worlds of commerce and science, and in theoretical and practical engineering, notably that of Col. George W. Goethals, whose letter, just received, I will read, and then await your pleasure:

ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION,
Culebra, C. Z., February 19, 1913.

Mr. CARROLL L. RIKER,
575 Fifty-ninth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEAR MR. RIKER: I have carefully read your pamphlet on the subject of "Power and Control of the Gulf Stream" and find it most interesting and fascinating. I think the subject warrants the investigation contemplated by the provisions of House bill 28239, and sincerely trust you will be successful in securing its passage.

Yours, sincerely,

GEO. W. GOETHALS.

The project which the bill is to investigate at first seems like a dream, but level-headed engineers and scientists who so prounounced it are now its most ardent supporters. On September 28, 1912, less than six months ago, it was first proposed by the author of a work entitled "Power and Control of the Gulf Stream."

On October 29, 1912, the following petition was signed by the well-known gentlemen of New York whose names follow:

OCTOBER 29, 1912.

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, hereby petition Congress to appropriate the necessary funds for and to authorize an expedition to determine as soon as possible the feasibility of constructing a jetty upon the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, and that a report be made thereon at the earliest date;

And that a further appropriation be provided for the investigation of ocean and air currents as they may relate to the project mentioned and the probable effects of such a jetty if built.

R. G. Packard, R. G. Packard, jr., Park E. Bell, Frederick A. Dunaka, Frederick C. Beach, Frederick W. Walz, Paul Goepel, Wm. Jay Schieffelin, Carroll L. Riker.

On December 30, 1912, the following petition was signed:

To the honorable PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE
OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Maritime Association of the Port of New York, representing the marine interests at this port, begs to respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to appropriate the necessary funds for, and to authorize an expedition for the purpose of determining as soon as possible the feasibility of, constructing a jetty on the Grand Bank of Newfoundland, and strongly urges that a report be made thereon at an early date.

We also respectfully petition that a further appropriation be provided for the investigation of ocean and air currents as they may relate to the project above referred to, and the probable effect on these currents were such a jetty constructed on the Grand Bank.

Very respectfully,

(Signed) WILLIAM SIMMONS,
Vice President.

On January 4, 1913, the Board of Trade and Transportation of New York City indorsed this bill, which I was about to introduce:

NEW YORK, January 8, 1913.

At the regular monthly meeting of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, held this day, the following resolution, submitted by Hon. Lewis Nixon, was thoroughly discussed and then unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we indorse a bill to be introduced into Congress by Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER for the scientific investigation of possible methods to divert icebergs from the course of trans-Atlantic steamships and for other purposes, authorizing the President of the United States to appoint a commission to make such investigation, and making an appropriation therefor.

A true copy.

FRANK BRAINARD, President.

Attest:

FRANK S. GARDNER, Secretary.

Since then this bill has received, among others, the support of the Hydrographic, Geodetic, and the Fisheries Bureaus, and also many of our foremost thinkers. A copy of the bill follows:

A bill providing that one competent officer of the United States Navy, who shall be nominated by the Secretary of the Navy for the approval of the President, with two other competent persons appointed by the President, shall constitute a commission to be known as the Labrador Current and Gulf Stream Commission, defining its powers and duties, and making an appropriation for its expenses.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby authorized and created, to be known as the Labrador Current and Gulf Stream Commission, which shall consist of one competent officer of the United States Navy, who shall be nominated by the Secretary of the Navy and approved by the President, with two other competent persons appointed by the President. The members of the commission shall serve without pay, but shall be allowed their necessary expenses while engaged in any duties devolving upon them under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate and report as to the feasibility and cost of causing an obstruction to the Labrador current passing over the Grand Banks of Newfoundland; to ascertain and determine, by practical experiments and otherwise, the best means that can be employed to induce and create a deposit upon the said Grand Banks of the sand and other sediment which is carried by the Labrador current; the effect of such obstructions—first, in preventing the encroachment of icebergs and fogs upon the course traveled by trans-Atlantic steamships; second, the effect upon the Gulf Stream and other ocean currents; third, the effect upon the climate of countries in the Northern Hemisphere on both side of the Atlantic Ocean; fourth, the probable effects upon the fogs of the coasts of the United States, Canada, the British Isles, and upon the waters thereabouts; and fifth, and any other effects of such obstruction, not specifically mentioned herein, which may be discovered during the investigations of the commission and deemed to be worthy of note for scientific or other reasons. The commission shall also make a thorough investigation of the currents and subcurrents of the ocean which would be influenced by the proposed obstruction of the Labrador current, or which now have, or after the creation of the obstruction would have, relation to it; and especially the probable effect upon the disintegration of the warm north-flowing Gulf Stream which now occurs by its meeting with the cold south-flowing Labrador current.

The commission shall also investigate and report upon all of the matters mentioned herein, and upon all other matters, methods, causes, effects, and phenomena which it may deem proper, or which it may discover in the course of its investigations and deem to be pertinent to or important to a scientific and accurate determination of the feasibility of obstructing the flow of the Labrador current and of the effects of obstructing such current.

The commission shall be vested with authority to engage such assistants and incur and pay from the appropriation hereinafter provided such indebtedness as it may deem necessary and useful in making the inquiries, investigations, soundings, observations, and experiments, and in making the most thorough and scientific studies that are practicable to carry into effect the intentions and purposes of this act, and to collate, plot, and report to Congress the results thereof.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Navy shall assign such vessels, with their officers and crews, as may be desired by the commission and approved by the Secretary, for the use of the commission, to enable it to perform the duties imposed by this act, without expense to the commission.

SEC. 4. That the several departments of the Government and the bureaus thereof, which are fitted by knowledge and experience to render any assistance to the commission in their investigations, upon the application of the commission to the proper officer of any such department, shall furnish any information within the purview of their duties which may be called for by the commission.

SEC. 5. That the commission shall immediately proceed with its investigations and report to Congress the results thereof, and their conclusions, within two years from the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the Treasury for the purposes of the investigation provided for in this act.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect immediately.

OCEAN CURRENTS.

Ocean currents practically control the interzonal distribution of tropical solar heat upon which the temperature and climatic conditions of the northern hemisphere largely depend.

The following description of the currents involved are taken from Maury, Pillsbury, and Soley, the most eminent authorities, as published by direction of the Secretaries of the Navy:

"The Gulf Stream is undoubtedly the greatest and mightiest of all terrestrial phenomena. There is a river in the ocean, its fountain in the Gulf of Mexico, its mouth in the Arctic Ocean; a current more rapid and conveying more heat than would a stream of molten iron the size and velocity of the Mississippi."

Ninety billion cubic yards of water at more than 75° Fahrenheit pass Cape Florida northward every hour (liberating more heat in being cooled to 55° than could be produced by the burning of 2,000,000 tons of coal every minute.—Riker).

It carries its waters northward, easily distinguished from the surrounding ocean by its deep blue color.

Its warm waters reach to Iceland; they flow into the Arctic Basin; toward the northern short of Spitzbergen and past Nova Zembla; into the waters of the British Isles, materially modifying their climate and that of all northern Europe. Otherwise Scandinavia would be uninhabitable, and Great Britain as sterile as Labrador.

Wherever it flows it serves to regulate all the processes of nature, while it contributes to the temperature of the region of the Arctic Circle more heat than comes to that region by the direct influx of the sun.

The great warm, north-flowing Gulf Stream conveys the needed heat for better climatic conditions in the northern hemisphere, but is met and robbed of it when but half way on its course by the cold, south-flowing Labrador current.

"The Labrador current sweeps down from the Arctic along the eastern coast of Greenland and from Baffin Bay and passes the coast of Labrador and Newfoundland, bearing with it vast fields of ice and enormous bergs, reaching the Gulf Stream.

"The intrusion of a large body of cold water running in a southerly direction between the Gulf Stream and the American shore is a phenomenon of so much importance that the Labrador current must be considered with the Gulf Stream, whose conditions it affects materially. The Labrador current pours into the Atlantic enormous masses of cold water, which flow southward along the American coast in a great current, which is quite as important as the Gulf Stream itself.

"This interference is most remarkable where the Polar current first meets the Gulf Stream, south of Newfoundland and over the Grand Banks, in a never-ceasing struggle for the mastery, with varying results, depending on the seasons, in which the winds often hold the balance of power, and the struggle is marked by the appearance of cold and warm bands extended across the Banks."

The Grand Bank, upon which it is proposed to build this jetty, and upon which the two now meet, lies southeast of Newfoundland, and is in general nearly circular in shape, about 300 miles in diameter at its top, a great plateau or sand bank, practically level on top, rising from the vast depths of the ocean (about 15,000 feet below), until there is only from 200 to 250 feet of water over it. It is covered generally with a fine shifting sand and gravel, like a beach, with somewhat more sedimentary deposits in places, and with coarser gravel, sand, mud, stone, iceberg deposit, and with rock projecting above the sand in its northern part, at and near the site of the proposed jetty.

There are but few spots in this great area where, if the Titanic were placed on end, one-third of her length would be under water, and her propellers would be higher out of water than the tops of the highest buildings in New York are above the streets. Over an area of about 10,000 square miles it is much shoaler, from which, although 200 miles from land and apparently in mid-ocean, it will be seen the depth is not very great.

The ice-cold Labrador current (as described) now passes Newfoundland, headed south, sweeps westwardly around Cape Race and over the Grand Bank with considerable velocity in a shallow, southwesterly stream, about 250 miles wide and about 200 feet deep, that occupies the whole depth and meets much of the waters of the warm Gulf Stream flowing rapidly in an opposite direction, also occupying nearly if not the whole depth.

As a result of this meeting and the shoalness of the water in which it occurs a part of the Labrador current is projected in a northwesterly direction by the collision, while the Gulf Stream is forced more or less to the south, depending largely upon their relative velocities.

A large part of the cold water of the current here mixes with the warm water of the stream, some underrunning it rises through and mixes with it at other points, greatly reducing its temperature, and a part here at times goes under the stream into the deep water of the Atlantic to the south, after producing uprisings and cross currents and continually mixing with the stream from beneath.

The Gulf Stream has here received a staggering blow, from which it never recovers. The eddies, cross currents, and revolving motions thus created, principally in and because of the shoal waters, are the beginning of its end.

Much of the heat of which the Gulf Stream has been thus deprived half way on its journey would probably be retained by it until well within the frigid zone, which needs that heat, and the torrid zone the frigidity or capacity for heat which the Labrador current would otherwise absorb from it, and which were neutralized when here exchanged by the two currents midway, benefiting neither their destinations nor their battlefield, but instead producing almost continuous fogs at and near their meeting place and largely along the entire coast southward; also bringing the bergs far south into the line of transatlantic steamers, instead of being melted by the warm water of the Gulf Stream near where they originate, or before calving. The offspring of these two great currents are the mongrels into which the Gulf Stream soon divides, they becoming aimless wanderers, without force or effect, compared with its previous irresistible, majestic sweep, and thus enfeebled, wholly unable to cope with the head-on southeasterly opposing flow of the European polar current after its projection to the surface as it surmounts the great mid-Atlantic backbone 400 miles south of the Faraday Hills.

Assuming the speed of the ice-cold Labrador current at 1 mile per hour, which is less than its average over the site of the proposed jetty, 200 miles long, averaging, say, 250 feet deep—the course for 25 miles crossing the deeper Cape Race channel—we have a flow of about 50,000,000,000 cubic yards per hour, or more than one-half that of the Gulf Stream passing between Bemini and Cape Florida, which chills the eastern coast of the United States and Canada, producing our late springs and frequent fogs.

It would require the burning of more than 1,000,000 tons of coal per minute to heat this mass of ice water from 35 to 55 degrees.

The Gulf Stream issues from between Bemini and Cape Florida, having a width of about 40 miles and a depth of about 1,200 feet, at a temperature above 75°, and this ice-laden current of brine, with an average temperature below 32°, beginning with its fiercest attack and head-on charge upon the Grand Banks, never ceases its attack upon it to its issuing source, and passing beneath it between Bemini and Cape Florida, even enters and chills it in its very cradle, the Gulf of Mexico.

The possible climatic effects upon the Northern Hemisphere by such a proposed conservation of the heat of the Gulf Stream are beyond conception. Referring again to Pillsbury's estimated flow of 90,000,000,000 cubic yards per hour passing Cape Florida, the heat passing north at that point, estimated between 75° and 35°, would melt 18,000,000,000 cubic yards of ice per hour, equivalent to about 1,800 square miles of ice 10 feet thick per hour, or an amount of ice of that thickness equal to the entire Polar Sea, estimated at 2,000,000 square miles, in less than 45 days.

When it is remembered that the northern mongrel branch of the Gulf Stream now reaches as far north as Greenland, with a temperature of 53°, it seems probably that if only one-fourth of its initial heat, when so protected, reached the Frigid Zone, it would melt every vestige of ice upon the Northern Hemisphere during the summers and so attack Jack Frost in the rear, by establishing a warm Polar Sea in the winter, as to make Siberia and British North America desirable residential countries at all seasons, and greatly reduce the winter temperature of the Temperate Zone here and in Europe.

There can be no doubt that the temperature of all northern Europe and America would be greatly tempered and benefited.

The immediate effect of the jetty when constructed will be to completely separate the Gulf Stream and the Labrador current, conducting them to the deep waters of the Atlantic at its end. A short distance beyond, the ice-cold and saline bottom waters of the Labrador current will sink to the bottom of the ocean, from 2 to 3 miles deep, and pass under the Gulf Stream southward. The lighter, fresher ice-laden surface of this current, pursuing the tendency of all light matter, will take an easterly course, paralleling the Gulf Stream on the north until its ice is melted and its fresher water has mixed with the waters of the ocean.

The eastern half of the Atlantic has a general northward tendency, while the western half has a southerly one greatest at the point of the jetty.

Therefore, while the natural course of the Gulf Stream leaving the point of the jetty if passing through still water would be about northeast, by virtue of the southerly movement of the ocean through which it passes that course upon passing the jetty would be first south of east, gradually changing to north of east at a point about midway across the Atlantic and about due east of the jetty; thence it will gradually take a more northeasterly course, impinging upon and bathing the British Isles, Norway, and the north of Europe, in the waters of the Caribbean, protecting them and pouring its heat into the Arctic Ocean on its mission to melt the ice of the Arctic regions.

The climate of the British Isles will be made much warmer and more equable, as will also the surface of the surrounding water, thus eliminating the fogs.

The magnitude of this project as it appears at first sight, comprising as it does the control of the two greatest of ocean currents, in themselves the most mighty of all natural phenomena, and what would be the resultant benefits, seems too vast to be practical, if not appalling.

The construction of this proposed mighty jetty or peninsula of land extending 200 miles into the ocean and tapering from about 40 miles in width at the shore end to 3 at its easterly extremity, and covering an area of more than 1,000 square miles, where the water now rolls hundreds of feet deep, amid fogs and icebergs; and in view of the general attitude of old Neptune when attempt is made to encroach on his domain, seems, indeed, a Herculean task, even for this twentieth century.

As this project is investigated and understood, it unfolds and reveals plainly to view that the amazing power and the means that are required to execute this Herculean task are ready and practically without cost, awaiting only man's direction.

The material that will quickly form this land is but an aggregation of grains of sand that are ever being moved southward by the action of the Labrador current over the site where it is proposed this jetty or peninsula shall rise.

If this material can be obstructed in its southerly movement at and about the site of the proposed jetty, it becomes evident that it would form a sandbar that would continue to build in width and height until it reached the surface of the ocean.

It only remains for man to place an obstruction that shall maintain a position a few inches above the constantly rising surface of the material that is deposited to effect the deposit of all the heavy matter that is in movement—no interference in any way with the current of the water above being required.

It is here proposed and submitted that this obstruction shall be effected by an obstructor to be stretched across the Grand Banks over the proposed site in the form of a great rope cable, or its equivalent, that has been saturated with asphaltum and weighted with wire, or otherwise, giving the requisite specific gravity or weight to cause it to just sink in the ocean and rest lightly upon the bottom or ocean bed; and having lesser specific gravity than the sand or other deposit, it will thereby be prevented from sinking into or being buried by the deposit by virtue of its greater buoyancy, it being heavier than the water but very much lighter than sand in sea water.

This obstructor should be so anchored as to be supported against the pressure of the southerly flow of the current against its side throughout its entire length and still have unrestrained vertical movement, to insure which it should be anchored by a series of kedge anchors at short intervals, and the connecting ropes should be supported by buoys so that they shall not become embedded in the sand and serve to prevent the natural upward movement of the obstructor upon the top of the sand or other deposit as it forms, thereby insuring the unfettered vertical movement of the obstructor as it is buoyed up higher and higher by the rising surface of the deposit.

The wave action upon the buoys will, to an extent, be transmitted to the anchor ropes and by them in a lesser degree to the obstructor.

The most important requisite to an obstructor, or marine deposit-inducer, in this sytem is that it shall have a specific gravity greater than the water and less than that of the materials to be deposited, but its shape, size, and general characteristics, including the method of holding it in position, may be varied at will to suit conditions.

An obstructor may, however, under certain conditions be employed that shall have a much greater specific gravity than the water and under some circumstances greater than that of the deposit.

In this case it would require to be underrun or lifted to the surface of the deposit each time the deposit by accumulation covered it—while in the first instance the obstructor should automatically rise as the deposit rises.

In the case of the heavier obstructor fewer or no kedge anchors would be required, and it would be surer to prevent undermining by strong currents and over uneven bottom, but this in most instances can be better effected by two obstructors.

An obstructor may be of any form and often should be made to meet special conditions, and usually the more flexible vertically the better.

It seems from careful investigation by the best authorities that for about seven-eighths of the distance to be traversed by the jetty the bottom would be almost perfectly smooth and level.

For one-eighth the distance just east of Cape Race the bed is not so level, but apparently a perfect bottom for the operation of the obstructor. In considering the certainty of this method of construction it must be remembered that more than three-quarters of this upbuilding will occur below the influence of wave action and seven-eighths below the serious influence of wave action.

The amount of material that is now being moved by the Labrador current can be increased by the least disturbance of the bottom sands to the north of the site of the proposed jetty. A slight disturbance of the bottom at one point may inaugurate a cut or movement by the current amounting to millions of yards of the bottom. Because of the almost perfect static balance or readiness to move on which now exists there, the author firmly believes that the proposed investigation will demonstrate the probability that at least three-quarters of the present flow of the Labrador current over the Grand Banks can be stopped by its own deposits within two years from the placing in position of the obstructor.

The simplicity, cheapness, and feasibility of the plan appeal at once to the scientist, engineer and the old salt. Not the least argument that would weigh in many instances would be their own experiences as boys with the mud puddle in the gutter.

This jetty when completed would be just south of the Virgin Rocks and the East Rocks, and would seem to be but the resurrection of the Virgin Peninsula, apparently the original coastal formation thereabouts, at no very ancient period.

The United States Government charts show an erosion or increased depth over great areas upon this site to have been one-third in less than 20 years, equivalent to the removal of a dam the height of a man's head reaching from New York to Chicago, through which clear space ice-cold water is pouring along our coast where none passed 20 years previously and which is increasing year by year. If this is not checked the climatic conditions along our coast will continually grow worse.

The increasing coldness of the waters in and about New York Harbor and the more frequent and denser fogs thereabout, of which there is no question, are corroborative proof that this Arctic flood is actually upon us, and at the rate of increase shown by the Government reports referred to in detail in "Power and Control of the Gulf Stream," 50 years will convert our coast into a semi-Labrador. This of itself is a serious matter and of sufficient importance to warrant the investigation asked for.

With man's direction and assistance as above outlined, Old Neptune will willingly bear the yoke of servitude, working unceasingly in sunshine and storm, night and day and at all seasons, to complete this mighty work. Nevertheless he will require careful watching, especially while nearing the completion of his job.

The saving by this plan over the best other method, as estimated by competent engineers, will reduce the cost from about $200,000,000 to less than $20,000,000—a clear saving of $180,000,000. It will also save more than half the time.

When the proposed investigations shall have been completed and the practicability and desirability of the project shall have been determined, then the carrying into effect of the proposed plan will become a matter for international action.

The following letters explain themselves:

OFFICE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
January 25, 1913.

The SECRETARY OF WAR:

1. Returned.

2. The accompanying bill, H. R. 28239, Sixty-second Congress, third session, provides for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report on certain matters with respect to the Labrador Current and the Gulf Stream and makes an appropriation to defray the cost of such work. The experiments and investigations provided for may result in the acquisition of useful and important data.

3. Section 1 of the bill provides that the commission shall consist of one competent officer of the United States Navy with two other competent persons appointed by the President. It is believed that the Coast and Geodetic Survey and the Corps of Engineers of the Army are the branches of the public service best fitted by knowledge and experience to cooperate in this important work, the former by reason of having charge of ocean surveys and deep-sea soundings and the latter on account of its long connection with the planning and construction of jetties and breakwaters.

4. It is suggested, therefore, that the bill be amended so as to provide that the commission shall consist, in addition to an officer of the Navy, of an officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, and one official of the Coast and Geodetic Survey. The suggested amendment is indicated in red on a copy of the bill herewith.

W. H. BIXBY,
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

[Third indorsement.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
January 27, 1913.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives, inviting attention to the foregoing report of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and to the accompanying copy of amended bill referred to.

The department concurs in the views expressed by the Chief of Engineers.

ROBERT SHAW OLIVER,
Assistant Secretary of War.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY,
Washington, January 24, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your letter of the 21st instant, inclosing a copy of House bill No. 28239, and requesting a special opinion of the same "as to the benefits to be derived to your department from an investigation of this kind, irrespective of the feasibility of the ultimate project," has been received.

In reply I beg to state that the Great Bank of Newfoundland is an unusually promising field for hydrographic work which, if carried out in a satisfactory manner, would be of great value to this bureau. The Danish Meteorological Institute carries on hydrographic work at a considerable distance to the north and northeast of this locality; the Canadian tidal and current survey covers the Canadian waters and has done a limited amount of hydrographic work on the western edge of the bank. Comparatively little systematic work has been done upon the Great Bank in recent years, and that done in the past related mainly to surface temperatures of the water.

The material most desired by this bureau for the locality in question would be as follows:

Observations upon the currents at various depths;

Observations upon the temperature and density or salinity of the water at various depths;

Observations upon the rise and fall of the tide by means of pressure gauges or otherwise.

Because of the great seasonal changes in the currents and in the temperature and salinity of the water, the value of observations for these items would be greatly enhanced by covering a period of at least one entire year. Their value would also be enhanced if the points of observation were so taken as to define one or more sections extending from or near Cape Race to deep water.

It seems probable that the Bureau of Fisheries would also be interested in procuring information concerning this locality of the kind contemplated in the bill.

Respectfully,
O. H. TITTMANN,
Superintendent.

HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 14, 1913.

Mr. CARROLL L. RIKER,
575 Fifty-ninth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: With regard to the bill which you are desirous of having introduced in Congress for the purpose of making an investigation of the currents and character of the bottom on and in the vicinity of Grand Banks, Newfoundland, the Hydrographic Office begs to advise you that, entirely apart from any consideration of the value of building an obstructor across those banks, any investigation of the currents, the depths of the water, and character of the bottom on the Grand Banks and in their vicinity will be most valuable to science, to navigation, and the safety of life at sea; and any money appropriated for making an investigation of these matters certainly would be well spent, and the Hydrographic Office will lend all the aid in its power in making any investigation of the subjects enumerated.

Respectfully,
GEORGE F. COOPER,
Commander, United States Navy, Hydrographer.

BUREAU OF FISHERIES,
Washington, January 23, 1913.

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In reply to your letter of January 21, I have the honor to say that the information relating to the temperature and salinity of the water, the velocity and character of the currents, and the nature of the bottom and its inhabitants which should be obtained by the investigations of a commission such as is provided by House bill 28239 would be of value to this bureau and to the fisheries. Should the commission be authorized, this office would desire to offer suggestions concerning the character of the data which it could utilize for its own purposes.

Lacking comprehensive data of the character indicated, definite opinion concerning the effects of the proposed jetty on the fisheries of the Grand Banks and on the coast of New England can not be formulated. It can be assumed, however, that any great increase in the temperature of the waters on the fishing banks would interfere with the spawning and probably cause the permanent removal of the important food fishes now inhabiting them, and it is doubtful if they would be replaced by equally valuable immigrants from the present warmer parts of the Atlantic.

Respectfully,
H. M. SMITH,
Acting Commissioner.

(William M. Calder, Member of Congress, sixth district, New York.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 27, 1913.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the inclosed bill, which is now under consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House and by the Navy and War Departments, may I ask your valued opinion upon the theory advanced by Mr. RIKER concerning the underlying cause of the ocean currents, as set forth in the inclosed pamphlet?

Any other comment upon this project will be greatly appreciated.

It already has strong supporters among scientists, submarine and practical engineers, and legislators familiar with its simple efficiency.

Under separate cover I am sending a map showing circulation of the waters of the north Atlantic.

Hoping I may be favored with a reply in time for use before Congress, I am,

Yours, very truly, WILLIAM M. CALDER.

Two inclosures.

NEW YORK, February 6, 1913.

To Commercial Associations and Others:

We ask your support for H. R. bill 28239.

THE MARITIME ASSOCIATION OF THE PORT OF NEW YORK.
WILLARD U. TAYLOR, President.

THE NEW YORK BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION.
FRANK BRAINARD, President.

To draw correct conclusions for the performances of these two currents under the proposed new conditions that can be verified, the cause which underlies and controls their movements must be established.

Should Mr. Riker's theory be established it will greatly simplify the arrival at correct deductions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing this bill as it was read.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

STEAM YACHT "DIANA."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1653, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1653) to provide American register for the steam yacht Diana.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the steam yacht Diana, wrecked and repaired in the United States, and owned by C. Ledyard Blair, a citizen of the United States, residing at Peapack, N. J., to be registered as a vessel of the United States: Provided, That said vessel shall not at any time hereafter engage in the coasting trade, under penalty of forfeiture.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington and Mr. MANN demanded a second.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the situation in reference to this bill is a very simple one. I have for many years considered the monopoly that exists in the coastwise trade in this country the most indefensible piece of legislation that to-day remains on the statute books. It prevents ships from entering the coastwise trade that can bring about competition. It lessens competition in railroad rates.

Now, there would be no question about this bill having gone through on the Unanimous Consent Calendar if opposition had not come from those gentlemen who seemed to think it is their especial privilege to protect the coastwise trade from the monopoly and trust of the United States. Some years ago there was a provision of law that when a vessel was wrecked on the American coast, if two-thirds, I believe it was, or one-half—not exceeding two-thirds, at any rate—of the cost of the vessel was in rebuilding it, it was entitled to a full American register.

The gentlemen who desire to continue this monopoly succeeded in getting that provision removed, so that under the law to-day when a vessel is wrecked on our coast and some person buys the wreck, if you take that wreck to an American shipyard and have it rebuilt, and rebuild 90 per cent of the wreck, it can not be restored to the American register unless Congress passes a special act to permit it to fly the American flag. I think it is one of the most indefensible pieces of legislation that ever passed this House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me finish, and then I will answer the question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fact in reference to this bill is that it was a foreign-built ship, built in Glasgow in 1896. It was afterwards purchased by an American citizen and its name changed to the Delaware. The purchaser spent $35,000 in reconstruction. The Delaware was burned in the dock in Hoboken, N. J., in March, 1905, and the wreck was appraised and sold for $35,000. Since that time it has been rebuilt and repaired. The foreign part was about $35,000, and the part that is American built amounts to $135,000; and yet, under our law, this vessel, owned by American citizens, practically built in an American shipyard, is not allowed to fly the American flag because some gentlemen think it is necessary to protect this coastwise monopoly.

I did not introduce this bill, but it has a provision in it that, even if you pass it, will prevent this vessel from engaging in the coastwise trade. If it had been my bill, I never would have put in such a provision here. I think it is entitled to American registry, and to go into every port of the American continent. I have no patience whatever with this effort to protect monopoly in the interest of holding up the transportation rates throughout the United States. [Applause.] But as the bill comes from the Senate, as it is reported by the committee, the vessel can not engage in coastwise trade. It merely asks that an American citizen, who has paid four-fifths of the original cost of the vessel, may have the right to fly the American flag on the peak of that vessel when he goes into foreign waters.

Mr. HARDWICK. Why would it not be better, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, to strike the proviso out? I am in sympathy with what the gentleman says, and I think we ought to strike the proviso from this bill and let the vessel engage in American trade.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman it is not my bill. I have volunteered to bring it up here because I thought it was a matter of justice. I have no interest in the matter. If I struck the proviso out, the bill as amended could not get through the United States Senate and it would be killed, and therefore I am in favor of taking what we can get.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this yacht engaged only for pleasure purposes?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I really do not know what purposes it is used for.

Mr. HARRISON of New York. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that this yacht belongs to the commodore of the New York Yacht Club, and it is purely a pleasure vessel, and there is no prospect or any intimation indicated that at any time in the future it will be used in commerce of any sort, and that is the reason why I, for one, am content to see this proviso placed in the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That it shall not engage in commerce along the coast?

Mr. HARRISON of New York. Precisely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] if it is the intention on his side of the House to introduce a bill, or, if a bill has already been introduced for that purpose, to so revise the navigation laws as to permit foreign-built vessels wrecked on any one of the American coast lines to receive American registry?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER], the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to answer that question. He has those matters in charge.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say to the gentleman that a bill like that was pending before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and was considered at length. A bill of like character passed the Senate and was referred to our committee, but neither one of the bills has been reported out of the committee, and of course will not be at the present session of Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the bill is passed in the form it is at present, with the proviso attached requiring that the vessel shall not be engaged in trade, the general question would not be raised in the instance of this yacht?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. The admission of the yacht Diana to American registry does not involve the general question. The bill was introduced in the Senate in the last Congress by Senator BRIGGS, of New Jersey. It was reintroduced in the present Congress while the late Senator Frye, of Maine, then chairman of the Committee on Commerce in the Senate, was living. It was reported out of committee and passed the Senate on the 12th day of January of last year. It was not reported by our committee until very recently and after the gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] asked us to consider it and act upon it. I then laid it before the committee for consideration, and we did act upon it and reported it to the House. I can not see any objection that can be made to the granting of American registry to this yacht.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The general question of coastwise trade competition is not determined on a bill like this?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It does not concern it at all, as it is excluded from the coastwise trade.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the attachment of the proviso really prevents the consideration of the general question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] a few questions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman says this bill will help to break up the monopoly of the coastwise trade?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not make any such statement.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If the gentleman will allow me, I will continue my question. The gentleman implied that there was a monopoly of the coastwise trade, and said that he had no patience with the laws which protected American shipbuilders. He has not any patience with any protection, has he?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I have not. The gentleman is right about that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, unless some gentleman desires to ask me a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] reserves the rest of his time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second for the purpose of gaining time for certain gentlemen on this side of the House who, I had reason to believe, were opposed to the passage of this bill.

I do not agree with much that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has said; but this bill is a bill to grant American registry to a steam yacht of less than 800 tons gross burden, which was valued after it was burned in 1905 at $30,000, and upon which $130,000 has been since expended in America.

I yield my time to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for 18 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to take a great deal of time in regard to this bill. I do not know that I have any particular objection to it, but I want to call the attention of the House to the attitude taken by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. The gentleman objected to the bill because this vessel was not permitted to engage in the coastwise trade. Undoubtedly the gentleman had not given any particular attention to the bill, or he would not have made that statement. This is a private yacht and could not engage in any trade. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that when you are granting this registry you are granting it to a millionaire who uses this yacht for pleasure purposes only, and you are permitting him to bring it into this country without the payment of the duty which he would be required to pay otherwise. There is a way, perfectly plain and open, for this gentleman to bring this luxury into the United States, if he wishes to do so, by paying the duty upon it. It seems that my distinguished friend from Alabama is opposed to placing a tariff even upon luxuries that are used by millionaires. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I wish to use a few moments to reply to that portion of the gentleman's statement in regard to the coastwise monopoly. The gentleman never fails to improve every opportunity to condemn the coastwise monopoly. It is true that there is a monopoly of the ships engaged in the coastwise trade of this country; that most of the lines running on the Atlantic coast are in a combine, and that most of the lines upon the Pacific coast are in a combine, but there are a few independent lines still left in the coastwise trade of this country. But there are no independent foreign lines that come to this country, and while the gentleman from Alabama, the distinguished leader upon that side of the House, is denouncing American monopoly I hope he will some time add the weight of his influence in denouncing these foreign steamship combines, because there is not a single foreign steamship line that touches American shores but what is in a combination that fixes prices by agreement, a complete monopoly which fixes in Europe the prices that every American citizen must pay either to cross the ocean or to send his products to any part of the world. I challenge anyone to dispute the truth of that statement. I hope that some time when the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is denouncing the monopoly in the coastwise trade, which no one defends so far as it is made by agreement, he will also take up this question and be patriotic enough to denounce the foreign steamship combinations that are preying upon the commerce of this country.

As this bill is guarded, I have no particular objection to it. The only question involved is the question of the duty upon this private yacht owned by a millionaire. It can not engage in the coastwise trade, and could not even if the provision was not in the bill. If there had been in the bill any provision allowing it to engage in the coastwise trade, the bill would not have been before this House. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Mr. ALEXANDER, agrees with me in my attitude in that respect. The only question is this: I know of nothing that is more of a luxury than a private yacht. Nobody but a millionaire could own it. If you want to grant to this millionaire the privilege of bringing this vessel into this country without paying the duty on it, go ahead and do it. That is the only question involved.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much is the duty?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Thirty-five per cent. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 10 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I yield for a question.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman says he thinks the owner of this yacht ought to pay the duty under the Payne-Aldrich bill, which I believe is 35 per cent. The question I want to ask him is this: Ought he to pay the duty of 35 per cent on the amount which the wreck sold for—$35,000—or ought he pay the duty on the cost of the wreck and the $135,000 which he has expended in the shipyards of this country?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is not a question of what he ought to pay. It is a question of what he would have to pay under the law.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the testimony in this case shows that this yacht was burned to the water's edge, and sank at the dock. She was afterwards raised and rebuilt in an American shipyard, and about $180,000 was spent on her. The American owner of the yacht thought he had a right to have it admitted to American registry, upon the ground that it was built in an American shipyard; but the United States court held, and rightly held, that so long as any part of the original vessel remained, and she was rebuilt, she did not come within the terms of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law, and that she was foreign built and must pay the duty of 35 per cent before being admitted to American registry. The questions involved were considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce when Senator Frye was chairman, and have been considered by the House Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In view of the fact that this yacht has been to all intents and purposes rebuilt in an American shipyard, and in view of the fact that by the proviso she is prohibited from engaging in the coastwise trade, we could not conceive any reason why the American owner of the pleasure yacht Diana should not have registry of that yacht, although he may be a millionaire. We do not consider that as a feature worthy of consideration at all.

Mr. MADDEN. He probably would not have been able to own the yacht if he was not a millionaire.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have always been consistently in favor of preserving our coastwise trade for American-built ships, and this does not violate that principle. I trust there will be no objection whatever to the passage of this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the full facts in connection with the passage of Senate bill 1653, to grant American registry to the yacht Diana, owned by Mr. C. Ledyard Blair, of New York. When you see that this yacht is to all intents and purposes an American boat, I think there should be no objection to its passage.

The yacht was built in Scotland in 1896. In 1902 it came to this country, the property of Mr. Bourne. In 1903 the yacht was burned while lying at Hoboken, her upper works being totally destroyed, her engines so injured that they had to be dismantled, and the steel plates badly warped. The boat sank to the bottom of the river, a total wreck. She was taken over by the underwriters as a total loss, and as such was sold to Mr. Percy Chubb, of New York, at a nominal figure, who raised the wreck and rebuilt her in this country at a cost of $86,648.87. The boat was purchased by Mr. Blair from Mr. Chubb in 1906, and after her purchase Mr. Blair spent an additional $34,290.22 on her. It seems that during Mr. Chubb's ownership of the Diana, after the boat had been rebuilt, he could have taken out an American registry for her by making proper application, but it was not done, and the act under which he could have secured such registration was repealed on February 22, 1906.

During the special session of 1911 the bill passed the Senate, but too near its adjournment to receive consideration in the House. The bill again passed the Senate last winter, and was sent to the House and referred to the committee who now have it in hand. The subcommittee, after giving Mr. Blair a hearing, reported favorably to the full committee, and the bill is now on both the Unanimous Consent Calendar and the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

TO EXEMPT FROM CANCELLATION CERTAIN DESERT-LAND ENTRIES IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 7875) to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in the Chuckawalla Valley and Palo Verde Mesa, Riverside County, Cal.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no desert-land entry heretofore made in good faith under the public-land laws for lands in townships 4 and 5 south, range 15 east; townships 4 and 5 south, range 16 east; townships 4, 5, and 6 south, range 17 east; townships 5, 6, and 7 south, range 18 east; townships 6 and 7 south, range 19 east; townships 6 and 7 south, range 20 east; townships 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 south, range 21 east; townships 5, 6, and 7 south, range 22 east; township 5 south, range 23 east, San Bernardino meridian, shall be canceled prior to May 1, 1916, because of failure on the part of the entryman to make any annual or final proof falling due upon any such entry prior to May 1, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. COX. I demand a second.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, this bill is an attempt to extend the time for making improvements and proving up in the case of about 800 entrymen under the desert-land act. These men entered land in good faith, intending to take water out of the Colorado River, but owing to international complications with Mexico the Secretary of the Interior has refused to permit them to take any water out of the Colorado River until these conditions are settled. The time for proving up expires the 1st of May next, and unless this act is passed these entrymen will lose the money they have put in.

In a previous discussion of this bill the statement was made that the entrymen, or some of their number, had been selling irrigation stock, based upon the proposition covered by this bill, all over the country. I desire to say emphatically that no irrigation stock has been sold anywhere to anybody. In fact, the entrymen have organized no corporation. There is no ulterior motive behind this legislation. It is intended, as I have stated, only to extend the time for two years, in which the entrymen are to make their improvements and prove up on their claims.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman that I do not know that I am opposed to the bill, but I have not had time to read it. How much time do you propose to give these men?

Mr. HAYES. We propose to extend the time for two years.

Mr. COX. How much land is involved?

Mr. HAYES. Two hundred and fifty thousand acres.

Mr. COX. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the settlers were on the land?

Mr. HAYES. No; they could not go on the land. The land is not worth 25 cents an acre unless you can get water onto it. The conditions have been such since the entry that no water could be taken out of the river, and this is to extend the time in the hope that the conditions between this country and Mexico may be settled and they can get the water.

Mr. COX. The gentleman hopes that within two years the water can be taken out of the river?

Mr. HAYES. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House as a House bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar I objected to its consideration because it seemed to me that it was likely to be the placing of good money to follow bad money, and an additional amount would be lost. The gentleman from California has called the bill up and assured me that it was not the intention of those interested in the passage of the bill to solicit or obtain more money from the entrymen, and has given me a letter from L. V. Shepherd, who is here in behalf of the bill representing these entries, which I ask to have read in my time so that it may be in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONGRESS HALL HOTEL,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1913.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The only purpose we have in asking for an extension of time on annual assessments and final proof in the Chuckawalla and Palo Verde irrigation project is that we may not be compelled to put any more money into the project until such time as we can be assured of water. There is no purpose on anybody's part to ask the entrymen for money for any purpose until they can be assured of water and success in the undertaking.

Yours, very truly,
L. V. SHEPHERD.

Mr. MANN. Assuming that the gentleman speaks correctly and represents the intention of those interested, I am perfectly willing to withdraw my objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to 20 minutes on this bill, but I ask unanimous consent that he may address the House for 10 minutes on another matter to be taken out of his time.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. MANN. I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. MADDEN. I must object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

EVAN URNER RINEHART.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on Naval Affairs from the further consideration of the bill (S. 7267) waiving the age limit to admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart, and pass the same.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, waived for one year in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart in consideration of his previous naval service.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas to 20 minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr Speaker, this is a bill to waive the age limit for Evan Urner Rinehart to enter the Pay Corps of the United States Navy. He has served for six years in the Navy, two years of sea duty. Mr. Rinehart during his two years of sea duty performed excellent service, and is reported as not having lost a day, nor did he have any trouble during that whole time with his hearing; but by reason of a slight defect in his hearing he was compelled to resign from the Navy. He now asks that he be allowed to enter the Navy and take the same examination as all other candidates would be compelled to take to enter the Pay Corps of the Navy. This bill has passed the Senate, and a bill in the identical terms was reported favorably in the House. It is recommended by the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Beekman Winthrop, who says:

The Bureau of Navigation of this department, which has cognizance generally of the appointment of officers of the Navy, recommends as follows:

"Mr. Rinehart had six years' service as a midshipman, October 3, 1904, to September 8, 1910, during which two years and two months were spent at sea. The reports of his two years' cruise after graduation are very good or excellent. He resigned on account of physical disability.

"In view of this previous naval service the bureau recommends favorable consideration of the bill to waive the age limit in his case for one year."

In view of the above recommendations and of the fact that the object of the bill is merely to waive the age limit, leaving to the determination of an examining board the question of Mr. Rinehart's physical, mental, and moral fitness the department has no objections to the enactment of this bill (H. R. 25428).

House bill 25428 is the House bill of the same terms as Senate bill 7267, which we have under consideration.

The bill merely places this young man, who is about a year above the age limit of 26, in a position to take the same examination that all other candidates would take for that duty. He is a graduate of the Naval Academy and has performed his sea duty and is absolutely in a very favorable condition to perform the duties of this office. I take it that a man who is a graduate of the Naval Academy and who has performed his sea duty is in a better position to perform the duties of paymaster than one who would come from the outside, and especially would it be more beneficial because in the event of war this man would not only be a paymaster in the Navy, but would be of service because he is a graduate of the Naval Academy and if his services were needed they could be used. He has performed sea duty and is thoroughly capable of doing this work.

He comes of one of the best Maryland families. He is a nephew of the man who made those statues that stand on each side of the clock. He is a nephew of the man whom Crawford designated to complete the bronze doors in the front of this Capitol. He is a fine young man and comes from one of the best families of our State, and I hope the bill will pass.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say only a word or two. A number of bills are going through this House that are, to say the least, of doubtful propriety. I must confess that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] makes a very good case for his man. I did not know at first that the young man had been in the Navy, or that the facts were as he has stated them. This thing of waiving the age limit which was fixed by law for the purpose of compelling a reasonable amount of service before a man reaches the retiring age ought not to be lightly put aside, and the practice of men going into the Army and Navy and resigning when they find it profitable to get out, and then, when they find that they are incapable of making as much money as their military salaries, desiring to get back, ought not to be encouraged by Congress. I have no objection to the passage of this particular bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Texas to yield me some time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Illinois such time as he may want, or as I have remaining.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is another one of those private snap bills to permit a man above the age limit to enter the Army or the Navy, because, for some reason, he is able to secure personal work on the part of Members of Congress and personal solicitation. This man was in the Navy and now wishes to get back into the Navy—not into the active service but into the Pay Corps. He wants to have the age limit waived, so that he may enter the Pay Corps—not to go into the dangerous service. He was in the Navy and resigned for physical disability not incurred in the line of service. For years he suffered from an ear trouble, and while he says it was on account of the discharge of a cannon, or something of that sort, no one else agrees with him.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. I simply wish to ask if the gentleman is aware—and perhaps he is—of the fact that the paymasters and other staff officers aboard ship are now frequently called upon to do military duty, and that a proposition is on foot that will probably be adopted under which the Pay Corps will be amalgamated with the line of the Navy?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I know that under the personnel bill we have gone to the extent of extreme idiocy in reference to the Navy, upon the assumption that a man who is best fitted for navigation ought to be running the engine, and that the man who is best fitted for running the engine ought to be put on the deck of the ship. But I had not dreamed that the Naval Committee would go so far that a man who was to pay the Navy was the best man to run the engine, to navigate the ship. That may come—I do not know—with the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, who has peculiar notions concerning the Navy. From the statement in this case it appears that this man's physical disability was not incurred in line of duty, that he had a history of having suffered with ear trouble prior to his admission to the Naval Academy, and that he was frequently under treatment for this disease while at the academy and during his tour of duty on board the first ship. I understand that he still suffers from the same trouble. That may be the reason—I do not know—that he does not want to get back into the active service. The Congress of the United States ought not to permit the officers of the Army and Navy to believe that through personal solicitation they can receive favors at the hands of the Congress.

If there be any one place in the world where orders ought to be orders, where men ought to stand on the level, it is among the officers of the Army and Navy, and everyone of them who receives admission to the Army or Navy through personal favoritism, through personal solicitation, is a ruined officer so far as his value to the Navy is concerned; and when this bill comes up I propose, as I stated last night, to insist upon a quorum being present before it passes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman gives notice that he will demand a quorum.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to tie up the work of this House, and if I can bring the bill up later——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if he finds a lull in the proceedings at any time after we get through with these appropriation bills.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then I withdraw the bill for the present, Mr. Speaker.

MARIA M'MURDIE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 1567) for the relief of Maria McMurdie.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1567) for the relief of Maria McMurdie.

Whereas on August 2, 1887, John McMurdie, an employee of the customhouse at Chicago, Ill., while in the discharge of his duties, was instantly killed by the sudden moving of an elevator cable while the deceased was in the act of stepping over same: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 to Maria McMurdie, widow, and the heirs at law of the said John McMurdie.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation of the bill from the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the payment of $720, one year's compensation, to the widow of a man named McMurdie, who, while in the employ of the Government of the United States as a fireman at the Chicago Federal building, and while in the performance of his duty was called upon to enter an attic of the building where there was no light, and where there was an unprotected cable, and while climbing over machinery where this cable was unprotected the cable caught him and carried him around and killed him. He was getting $60 a month. A bill was introduced for the payment of $5,000. The Committee on Claims reported a bill for the payment of one year's salary at $720. His widow is a very old woman. She is living on the charity of her daughter. The daughter's husband is earning only sufficient to make a very meager living for his own family. The widow of this man is very ill, and has been for some time; she can not live very long, and if she is to have any relief it should be granted now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman has no doubt of the truth of these statements?

Mr. MADDEN. I know the family very well.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman has personal information and has known them——

Mr. MADDEN. For 20 years.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit me to ask, Does the Secretary of the Treasury recommend this bill?

Mr. MADDEN. The Secretary of the Treasury and the coroner's jury found the Government of the United States or the local officials were negligent in causing this man's death.

Mr. COX. I may be confusing the report on some other bill; I may have in mind some other bill than this; but my recollection is it is either this bill which the gentleman is offering or some other bill where the Secretary of the Treasury said that if Congress wanted to pass this he had no objection to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the Secretary of the Treasury could not direct Congress to pass a bill.

Mr. COX. He could recommend it in direct terms, one way or the other.

Mr. MADDEN. He does recommend it.

Mr. COX. That is what I am trying to find out. Will the gentleman in his own time read what the Secretary of the Treasury says?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. He says:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 19, 1911.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, relative to John McMurdie, deceased, formerly a fireman in the United States customhouse building at Chicago, Ill., with which you inclose a copy of bill H. R. 1567, for the relief of Maria McMurdie, widow, and the heirs of John McMurdie, and in reply you are advised that the records of the department show that on August 2, 1887, while passing through the attic of the building Mr. McMurdie was fatally injured by the gearing of the elevator cables and died within a few hours after the accident.

The department is unable to express an opinion regarding the merits of the claim, as there is nothing on file relating thereto except as above stated.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

We have a copy of the coroner's verdict here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did not the Secretary recommend this?

Mr. MADDEN. He did.

Mr. COX. If I remember the report correctly, it shows they assumed all of that risk.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the cables were unprotected, the gearings were unprotected, and if this accident had happened in a private institution the institution would have had to pay the full limit provided by law. And there is no reason on earth why, when a man is killed in the service of the United States Government, the Government ought not to be held responsible, and that those who were left dependent as a result of his death ought to be provided for by reasonable compensation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Held responsible in reasonable damages?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say this will be a final settlement?

Mr. MADDEN. Absolutely final. They agreed to accept $720 in lieu of the amount provided for in the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If this bill should fail to pass, would it not perhaps be the only exception to all the cases brought to the attention of Congress, where the Treasury has been opened for the payment of such claim?

Mr. MADDEN. If this bill fails to pass, it will be an exception to the rule, of course.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I shall make no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, discharging the Committee of the Whole House from further consideration of this bill, and passing the same.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, the Committee of the Whole House discharged from further consideration of the bill, and the bill was passed.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMISSIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 3, 1913.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I resign my place as a member of the Commission in Control of the House Office Building, and also of the Commission on Reconstruction of the Hall of the House of Representatives.

Most respectfully, yours,

J. G. CANNON.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT TO COMMISSIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as a member of the Commission in Control of the House Office Building, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] as a member of the Commission on Reconstruction of the Hall of the House of Representatives.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present the conference report on the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the services of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee presents a conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1604).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 10, 17, 19, 20, 23, 27, 28, 29, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, and 57.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 22, 24, 35, 36, 38, 39, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, and 64; and agree to the same.

The conference committee has come to no agreement on amendments numbered 25 and 26.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the amount "$500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$475,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For inland transportation by railroad routes, $51,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid for carrying the mail over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo., other than upon a mileage basis, but, Provided further, That the Postmaster General may, in his discretion, pay within the present law a fair and reasonable price for the special transfer and terminal service at the Union Station at East St. Louis, Ill., and at the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting, and heating of the mail building and transfer service at St. Louis, Mo., provided the amount so paid shall not exceed $35,000: Provided further, That on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from the enactment of section 8 of the act of August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the Postmaster General is authorized to add to the compensation paid for transportation on railroad routes on and after July 1, 1913, for the remainder of the contract terms, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof per annum, excepting upon routes weighed since January 1, 1913, and to be readjusted from July 1, 1913, until otherwise provided by law: And provided further, That the joint committee to make inquiry into the subject of postage on second-class mail matter and compensation for the transportation of mail provided for by the act of August 24, 1912, shall make an inquiry into the question of the transportation of second-class mail matter in fast freight trains and the manner of handling incident thereto, and report upon the same and the best method of effecting its discontinuance if such be found advisable."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 30: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "thirty-two" and insert in lieu thereof the words "three hundred and thirty-four"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the figures "$24,755,850" and insert in lieu thereof "$24,969,990"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "three hundred and four" and insert in lieu thereof "thirteen hundred and ninety"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "eleven hundred and sixty-eight" and insert "two thousand seven hundred and eighty-eight"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon in the accompanying conference report on Senate amendment No. 26, namely:

Senate amendment No. 26: This amendment reenacts the law of 1912 for carrying the mails over the bridge across the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo. The amendment increases the amount appropriated by the House $2,500,000 and provides for increasing the department's estimate for inland transportation by railroad routes $1,839,000. Provides for a special weighing on all railroad routes and a readjustment on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from the establishment of the parcel post. This would necessitate a weighing of all mails carried and a readjustment for the increase in weights of the regular mails as well as the allowance for additional increase for parcel post mails because it is impracticable to actually separate the parcel post or fourth-class mails from the others and weigh them separately over the routes carried. The department's estimate of the probable cost which such a weighing would result in for 10 months of the fiscal year (assuming a weighing to begin September 1) was $3,861,000 on account of increase of weight of regular mails; $4,812,000 increase on account of parcel post (fourth-class matter), and $500,000 estimated cost for 35 days' weighing and tabulation, making a total of $9,173,000. The department's estimate for probable increase on account of parcel post is 10 per cent of the annual compensation.

Under the proposed substitute the special weighing is dispensed with and no additional compensation is allowed for increase in the regular mails, and the Postmaster General is authorized to allow 5 per cent annually of the compensation paid on routes on July 1, 1913, for the remainder of the contract terms on all routes excepting those which are to be weighed subsequent to January 1, 1913, and to be readjusted from July 1, 1913. These excepted routes are those which are now being weighed and which will receive through the present weighing an increase on account of the present increase in parcel post or fourth-class mail. Five per cent of the compensation on the routes affected will amount to approximately $2,000,000 a year, which is a very material reduction under the estimates of the department and the provisions of the Senate amendment.

This amendment also authorizes the joint committee to make inquiry into the subject of postage on second-class mail matter and compensation for the transportation of mail provided for by the act of August 24, 1912, to make inquiry into the question of the transportation of second-class mail matter in fast freight trains and the manner of handling incident thereto, and report upon the same and the best method of effecting its discontinuance if such be deemed advisable.

The bill as passed by the House carried $280,662,781.

The bill as passed by the Senate, $283,785,442.

The bill as finally agreed upon in conference carries $283,352,171.

JOHN A. MOON,
D. E. FINLEY,
JOHN W. WEEKS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] moves the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] explain what this amendment does? What is the proposition? It is impossible to tell by hearing it read, and it is a very important matter.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the statement was read for the purpose of explanation of this bill. I am sorry there was not that order in the House which would enable the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to hear. I will call the attention of the gentleman, if he desires to know the position of the conferees on this question, to the fact that in the Senate amendment it was provided that the railway mail carried over the bridge at East St. Louis should be upon a mileage basis, and that for fuel, light, and space, the department in its discretion might give a sum of money not exceeding $20,000.

The conference committee, after full consideration of that matter, considering particularly the contention of the railroad companies that they were expending some $65,000 for the benefit of the Government there per annum, and the contention of the department and others that the expenditure was some $30,000 and some odd only, reached the conclusion to amend the Senate amendment by reenacting practically the law of last year, and we gave them $35,000, which we think is probably fair compensation.

Now, there is a bill, as the gentleman knows, for the repeal of that statute upon which the compensation is based. Until that is disposed of we thought it best to reenact the old law. The second part of this Senate amendment provided for weighing of the mails of the United States for 30 days.

This, of course, would be a special weighing, and it would not supersede the annual weighing under the statute. This is for the purpose of ascertaining what proportion fourth-class matter, known as parcel-post matter, holds to the whole mail of the United States, in order that we might determine the legitimate pay due to the railroad companies for the transportation for this increased weight of mails.

We were not able to reach any conclusion on the question of weighing because of the indefiniteness and uncertainty of the basis for the determination. Various propositions were suggested, but the conferees were not able to agree upon the weighing of the whole mail, because that involved, if settled upon the basis of a new weighing next year, an increase of $3,800,000 as compensation on general mail to the railroad companies, to be paid by the Government, and we could not agree to that, because the statutory contract now calls for a four-year weighing; so that view of the question was discarded.

Mr. MANN. That feature is left out in the conference report?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. That is left out. So the conferees thought the most equitable thing to do was to weigh the parcel-post matter and care for that. But after calling in the executive officers of the department we were convinced that that could not be done without more cost to the Government than the amount involved. So, after ascertaining from the department that the increase of the parcel-post fourth-class matter in the mails would probably amount to from 7 to 10 per cent of the whole compensation, an agreement was reached by the conferees to pay after the 1st of July, 1913, the sum of 5 per cent per annum of the whole weight of the mails to cover the additional compensation for parcel post.

Mr. MANN. Let me see if I understand the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. During the contract period?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the conference provides that after the 1st of July next there shall be added to the amount paid on the various contracts 5 per cent in each case?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It is 5 per cent per annum after July 1 for the remainder of the contract term.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Except upon the routes weighed since January 1, 1913, which are to be adjusted on July 30, 1913, until otherwise provided. The effect will be to add about $2,000,000 per annum for the additional compensation for the extra mail. It is perhaps not more than two-thirds of what ought to be paid.

Mr. MADDEN. The increased volume is about 10 per cent, and you are only agreeing to provide for 5 per cent?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. POWERS. I did not quite catch the substance of the conference report as to the weighing of the mail.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The department has asserted that the increase would be 10 per cent, and the conference report provides for the payment of 5 per cent to cover the additional increase of pay to the railroad companies after July 1.

Mr. POWERS. And you weigh all the mails?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. We are not weighing any of them.

Mr. POWERS. Do you expect to do that?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Under the law we have quadrennial weighings, and we do not interfere with that law.

Mr. POWERS. I understand; but there is no special weighing provided for under the report?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Not at all; and we thereby save $500,000 for the cost of weighing.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. COX. I heard the statement read, and understood that the conferees had agreed upon the language to be adopted. Has the gentleman any information to give in addition to the reading of the language agreed upon and incorporated in the bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. It has all been read. This is the language.

Mr. COX. I did not have opportunity to read it, but I heard the conference report read.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. The conference report comes in this shape: We agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment. Every word of the law is in this report.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman from Kansas desire?

Mr. MURDOCK. I would like to have five minutes' time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, this is a highly technical matter, and it has now reached this stage: The House originally passed the ordinary appropriation for railway-mail pay. The Senate amended that item by adding an elaborate proposition for the reweighing of the mails and for the inclusion of matter in the mails not now in the mails, known as the blue-tag matter, and by other provisions increased the sum to be paid to the railroads some twelve or thirteen million dollars.

The bill came back to the House with these Senate amendments. I sought to get a separate vote at that time on the propositions, but failed to do so. The bill went to conference. It came back from conference with the House managers disagreeing to the Senate amendment numbered 26, which admittedly provided for an increase of pay to the railroads of some $10,000,000. Upon that I secured a separate vote in an attempt to show the sentiment of the House. Now the House managers have brought back from conference an agreement. As nearly as I could understand it in the confusion, the agreement is that, in some way to me unknown, 5 per cent is to be added to the present pay of the railroads. Where it is to be added, how it is to be added, by whom it is to be added, I can not tell, and I do not think 2 per cent of the membership of this House can tell.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think they can.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, here is a matter of legislation upon which this House is asked to legislate on a mere statement. The language of the law, as I understand it from the statement, is not before this House, and this is a highly technical matter. The whole question goes not merely to the matter of an increase of $2,000,000 a year. Unquestionably there has been an increase in the weight of the mail by reason of the adoption of the parcel-post system, and undoubtedly the railroads should be paid for that increase in weight; but this House ought to have the right to know what the law is which is offered by which that increase is to be granted, and that has not been done. It is a manner of legislation that is out of all conscience, I will say to the gentleman. The House ought not to legislate on this subject in this way.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MURDOCK. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman believe that the railroads now are getting more money for carrying the mails than they ought to get?

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the New York Central, the Pennsylvania, and all the larger railroads are getting too much money for the carriage of the mails on their main lines.

Mr. GARNER. If I understand the purport of this amendment, if it becomes a law it will increase the present contracts with the railway companies 5 per cent. Is that correct?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Just a moment.

Mr. GARNER. If that is correct, the gentleman from Kansas has information as to what the effect of this law is. If it simply increases the present contracts 5 per cent, there can be no misunderstanding on the part of this House as to what the effect of this law is.

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question. He has not heard the law read. The law is not before the House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman does not know any more about this law than I do, because he has not read it. Now, we have weighed the mail this spring in New York and Pennsylvania. Are we to add 5 per cent to the pay in that section, where the weight of the parcel-post matter has already been included? Will the gentleman answer that? He can not answer it, because he has no opportunity to know.

Mr. GARNER. I know the gentleman from Kansas will, and the House ought to, take the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the committee, as to the effect of this law. It is absolutely impossible for us to go into a reference to the decisions, legal and otherwise, as to the effect of this language or the other; but the gentleman from Tennessee and his fellow conferees evidently have considered this from every standpoint, and their statement to the House is that it will increase the present contracts 5 per cent, and that the Post Office Department estimate that the increase in the weight is 10 per cent.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. MURDOCK. How does the gentleman know that?

Mr. GARNER. I have taken the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

Mr. STEENERSON. As I understand the proposition in that report, it does not provide for any increase in the weighing section that was weighed since the 1st of January, namely, the eastern section. There is no increase in that, is there?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COOPER. Has the amendment now under discussion been read to the House, or merely the statement of the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The statement was read.

Mr. MADDEN. The amendment was contained in the statement.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the statement was read in lieu of the report.

Mr. COOPER. I understand that to be true. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee about how long that amendment is and what reason there is for not reading it to the House?

Mr. MADDEN. It was read to the House. It was contained in the statement.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Kansas had been listening, he would have known what the provision was.

Mr. MURDOCK. I was listening, and I took the pains to ask for order that I might hear.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then the gentleman did not comprehend. Here is the law exactly as it is provided:

Provided further, That on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from the enactment of section 8 of the act of August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the Postmaster General is authorized to add to the compensation paid for transportation on railroad routes on and after July 1, 1913, for the remainder of the contract term, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof per annum, excepting on routes weighed since January 1, 1913, and to be readjusted from July 1, 1913, until otherwise provided by law.

Now, the explanation of it was, as the weighing continues under the general law now, this compensation, of course, will cease. It will be 5 per cent under the contract up to the time of weighing in each section and then they will have the full weighing, and full compensation will be based on the weighing as heretofore. We have no separate weighing of parcels now. The department has made an estimate on which we act, and it is the only estimate by which justice can be done. It is estimated that the railroad companies to-day are carrying mail on account of this enactment to which we refer, of 10 per cent over the previous amount carried. The department has estimated—and the estimate is based upon the return from all the important towns in the United States giving the weight of the mail, the destination, and estimate upon the cost of the carriage—and say that on account of this law which we have passed the railroad companies would be probably entitled to $4,011,000, the committee's estimate in the Senate being less than that by about a million or a million and a half. The conferees thought it would be on the safe side of the proposition, that if instead of giving 10 per cent or 7½ per cent, we should give 5 per cent increase, which will amount approximately to $2,000,000 per annum. The conferees as a result of this report, save to the United States over $7,000,000 of money against the Senate amendment when first here presented.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to say that it is impossible for any Member to understand this provision clearly without having actually and intelligently read it. It is impossible in a technical matter like this to judge from a statement what the effect will be. It proposes to increase the rate of pay to the railroads 5 per cent. The mails were weighed last fall in New England, were they not?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. A part of it was weighed and a part of it was not weighed.

Mr. MURDOCK. As to the part that was weighed. Now, this adds 5 per cent to the last year's adjustment of pay to the

New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad in the pay of 1913 to 1914.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; we do not add anything until after July, 1913.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is my question—do we add 5 per cent after July, 1913?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes; weighed before January 1.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, between July 1, 1914, and July 1, 1915, if this system is to be continued, and no doubt it will be, is 5 per cent to be added on to the money that we have previously paid?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. On the remainder of the contract?

Mr. GARNER. May I suggest to the gentleman that I have just read in the statement that these increases must be based on the weighing prior to January 1, 1913?

Mr. MURDOCK. I caught that, but the mails were weighed in New England last year. The pay to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad is to be adjusted on that weighing.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; there is no additional 5 per cent on the 5 per cent. It is 5 per cent on the full carriage for the remainder of the contract.

Mr. MURDOCK. I hope the law so states.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me some time?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the reading of the amendment I thought—and if I am mistaken, I would like to be corrected—made it very plain. The 5 per cent to be added by this was from July 1 until the end of the contract.

Mr. GARNER. Based on the 1912 weighings.

Mr. MANN. The contract is based on the weighings prior to January 1, 1913, but the 5 per cent is added from July 1, 1913, until the end of the contract.

Mr. GARNER. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Of course, as to those weighings made last fall, that would be practically three years or three and a half years.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is the way the gentleman caught the reading?

Mr. MANN. That is the way it reads, as I understood it, and I think I caught it correctly.

Mr. GARNER. That is right.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the proposition, it is that this 5 per cent is to be added for the unexpired term of the weighing period in each section, there being four weighing sections in the United States, one of which was weighed last year. That has three years to run, so that this 5 per cent will be added to those three years. The next weighing section, which was weighed a year ago, would have the 5 per cent added for two years. The other weighing section, having one year of unexpired term, would have 5 per cent added for one year. The House should understand that the ordinary natural increase in the weight of the mail per annum in the last few years has been about 6 to 7 per cent. It is estimated that through the parcel post there will be an additional increase of 10 per cent. When you weigh the mail on a railroad this year, the railroad is paid for the next coming four years on the basis of the weight to-day; naturally, it would not get the benefit of the increase. At the end of four years they find that the weight of the mail has increased 24 per cent on the average, which, of course, has been the rule for many years, because there is a constant increase in the volume of mail. The total railway mail pay last year was about $49,000,000, and this 5 per cent, as I understand it, would amount somewhere to nearly two and a half millions, which is a very conservative estimate of the extra compensation to the railroads, because no doubt the parcel post has added a great deal more than 5 per cent to the total weight of the mail. This is a temporary expedient, and I congratulate the conferees upon arriving at so reasonable an adjustment of the differences with the Senate. I believe that the Congress ought in the near future to readjust the railway mail pay, and I understand this commission which we authorized is working on that, but in the meantime this will serve the purpose very well.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take any time unless I can have order, and I would not take the time of the House if the gentleman from Tennessee had had sufficient order so that those upon this side of the House could have understood the explanation which he made. I am satisfied they did not, and it is by request of those immediately about me that I am taking time.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, will he, for the benefit of this side of the House, read the proposed substitute as it has been agreed upon by the conferees?

Mr. WEEKS. I will in a moment. As this bill passed the House the railroads would receive no compensation whatever for the increased burden put on them for carrying the parcel post, since it went into effect on the 1st of January, 1913. As the bill passed the Senate it would require a reweighing, which not only would give them the benefit for the additional burden imposed on them by the parcel post, but would give them increased pay for all mail matter carried, to which they would not be entitled, because the weighing is in four periods. As the Members of the House should know, the country is divided into four sections. One section is weighed each year. Thereafter the weight so taken continues as the basis of pay for four years. Therefore, if there were a general reweighing at this time the section which was weighed last year, for instance, would receive additional compensation for three years and a half, or during the contract period on all mail, but it would not be entitled to any increase on mails other than those developed by the parcel post. In order to get the exact amount of parcel-post mail carried it would be necessary to have a reweighing throughout the entire country, which would cost something like $500,000. The Post Office Department estimates the amount of the parcel-post mail carried would probably cost the Government, if the weighing took place, about $4,000,000, which would be something less than 10 per cent.

But in order to arrive at a conclusion, and to avoid a reweighing, which would cost $500,000, the conferees have decided to recommend the payment of 5 per cent of the amount which corporations will receive under the existing weighing, and this is limited to those corporations which were weighed before January 1, 1913. The only section of the country which has been weighed since that time is New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, and no additional pay will be paid to the railroads in those three States. Now, I will read, as has been requested by the gentleman from Kansas, the provision we have put into the bill, which I think is perfectly plain and will be satisfactory to the Members of the House:

Provided further, That on account of the increased weight of mails resulting from the enactment of section 8 of the act of August 24, 1912, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, the Postmaster General is authorized to add to the compensation paid for transportation on railroad routes on and after July 1, 1913, for the remainder of the contract term, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof per annum, excepting on routes weighed since January 1, 1913, and to be readjusted from July 1, 1913, until otherwise provided by law.

In other words, the extra compensation will go to all the corporations located in sections of the country where the weighing took place before January 1, 1913, and only to those railroads, and it will be 5 per cent of the monthly pay as the pay is made, based on the weighing when it did take place one, two, three, or four years ago.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEEKS. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. The words "per annum" are used after the expression "5 per cent."

Mr. WEEKS. At the rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. LEWIS. Now, might that be construed in the case of a contract weighing of a railroad, extending probably four years from that time, to be 5 per cent for 1914, 5 per cent more for 1915, et seriatim?

Mr. WEEKS. No; the gentleman from Maryland knows the railroad is paid on the basis fixed for a four-year period, and unless some report is made by the commission which is now considering second-class mail rates and railway mail rates it will be at the rate of 5 per cent each year, paid monthly at the same time other payments are made, and the 5 per cent will be paid on the basis fixed at the beginning of the quadrennial period.

Mr. LEWIS. I want to say I believe that was the purpose of the conferees, but that the expression "per annum" suggests some doubt as to the effect of the provision.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think there is any doubt about it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is the substitute, as the gentleman has given it to the House, permanent law if enacted?

Mr. WEEKS. I believe it is permanent law until some other law is passed, but the gentleman knows we have provided in this very bill that the commission considering this subject shall report before the 4th of March, 1914, its conclusions on this subject.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; but the gentleman also knows after the commission has reported that this House and Senate must enact a law upon their findings.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. And there have been innumerable commissions in the past reporting, but no resulting laws have been enacted. Let me get this clear in my mind. Under this substitute which the gentleman has read, do we continue to pay the increase of 5 per cent year by year thereafter?

Mr. WEEKS. During the present contract period.

Mr. MADDEN. In other words——

Mr. MURDOCK. Let me complete my question. Now, in the case of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad in New England, where the mails were weighed last year, if we pay them under this law after July 1 on the basis of 5 per cent of the increased weight the readjustment showed for that weighing period, do we in the fiscal year 1914–15 pay them the increased 5 per cent on the just preceding payment, including 5 per cent on the adjustment of last year's weighing?

Mr. WEEKS. Five per cent on the only basis there is, which is the weighing which took place last September.

Mr. MADDEN. Under the present contract arrangement we pay them a fixed sum for the carrying of the mails.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And we increase the fixed sum now 5 per cent?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes; for the balance of the contract period.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not increased until the end of the contract period?

Mr. WEEKS. It is not.

Mr. STEENERSON. If I understand this provision correctly when the next weighing period arrives and the next weighing takes place that does away with this provision entirely, because it is based upon the new weighing.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I discover that you say 5 per cent per annum is added to pay for the increase in the mail occasioned by the parcel post?

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you use the words "per annum" if only 5 per cent additional is to be added to the sum which was agreed upon when the contract was made?

Mr. WEEKS. At the rate of 5 per cent per annum.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not strike out the words "per annum" and say "5 per cent"?

Mr. WEEKS. Because we believe that the rate of pay should be at the rate of 5 per cent per annum for each year. And we furthermore were advised by the officers of the department——

Mr. FOWLER. The only question that is in my mind is the one that was raised by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS]. Some of the contracts with railroads have three years to run yet. The law might be construed to mean an increase of 5 per cent for the first year, 5 per cent additional for the second year, and 5 per cent for the third year, making an increase of 15 per cent for the entire three years.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the gentleman will read that clause again.

Mr. LEWIS. I will read it if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] will yield. I want to say to the House in all seriousness that this is not a captious objection. I believe the conference committee has said what it did not mean, namely, that this compensation will be increased annually by 5 per cent, and now I read the language of the amendment:

It is authorized to add to the compensation paid for transportation on railroad routes for the remainder of the contract term, not exceeding 5 per cent thereof per annum.

Let me say the compensation of the Pennsylvania Railroad, for example, weighed last year, is a fixed sum, let us say 10 per cent of the aggregate railway mail pay——

Mr. WEEKS. I have not yielded, Mr. Speaker; I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEEKS. I have not yielded the floor to anyone for any other purpose than for the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] to read the part of the paragraph which he had in mind. If he desires to discuss that part of the paragraph, I wish him to do it in his own time.

Mr. LEWIS. I have no time, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] declines to yield, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] that I desired to bring to his mind that the law relating to the pay of the railroads was reduced 10 per cent in 1876 and 5 per cent in 1878.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, in the actual administration of those reductions of pay it was found that the rate to the railroad was not reduced 15 per cent, but, as the gentleman knows, 14½ per cent.

Mr. WEEKS. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, does not this inclusion of the words "per annum" in the substitute bring about precisely the same effect except in the reverse of it?

Mr. WEEKS. My opinion is that it does not. Now, that is all there is to it. It is a question of opinion.

Mr. MURDOCK. It is an opinion.

Mr. WEEKS. And I do not believe the Post Office Department or any officer in the Post Office Department would ever construe it in any other way. As the gentleman knows——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY].

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say this, and say it emphatically, that I believe the House conferees have carried out in good faith the will of the House. We could not have everything in the bill as the House passed it, but I do say that on all material points involving large sums of money and increase of appropriations the Senate conferees receded. If the Senate provisions in this bill had gone through, I believe that the expenditures for the Government would necessarily have been increased anywhere from $9,000,000 to $15,000,000. That is not true in the shape that the House conferees bring back the bill to this House.

Now, as to amendment No. 26: We worked out carefully the proposition of how this 5 per cent would affect the railroads. As the law is, we know the mails are weighed once in four years in each of the four contract divisions of the country. The railroads, of course, are paid one-fourth of that amount annually. It is true that in the way we bring back the provision here we simply add 5 per cent annually to that. It is not cumulative. We will not pay 5 per cent and 5 per cent additional to that and 5 per cent more next year, or anything of the kind. The word "annually" was placed in the amendment because the point was made, and made by good lawyers, that if we would leave out the word "annually" it might be considered by the department to mean an increase of only 1¼ per cent; so that is the reason why the language is placed here as it is.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Is this increase a flat increase of 5 per cent, or does it simply give the Postmaster General authority to make an increase of 2 or 3 per cent, say, if he thinks proper?

Mr. FINLEY. Substantially it does.

Mr. WILLIS. That is, he can make a smaller increase than 5 per cent if he desires?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, there is one point that I wish to emphasize, and that is that the House conferees having in good faith obeyed the mandate of the House, there can be no valid objection, based upon principle, to what we have done with reference to this matter.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, after carefully listening to the reading of the amendment which has been accepted and to the discussion which has been had, my understanding is that this will be its result: That at the end of the present running contracts, other than those where weighing has been had since January 1, the railroads will ultimately receive 5 per cent more than they otherwise would receive in the total. If the contracts have one year to run, two years to run, or three years to run, the effect of the amendment is to give them 5 per cent more than they would otherwise receive.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to argue with the gentleman. I am simply stating my understanding of it.

Mr. GOOD. Just one question. What place, then, have the words "per annum" in this contract?

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose that is because the railroads are paid on the per annum basis. It seems to me that no other construction than I have stated of the language is possible, and I hope that that is the correct construction of it, because I understand that is what was intended.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to think that this is a fair settlement of this rather vexed and trying question, but I wish to remark on the difference in the treatment we accord to these great corporations and the treatment we accord to the humblest and poorest-paid servants of the Government in the postal service. Of course we do not intend, either individually or collectively, to care for the corporations and forget the humble citizen; and yet it is a curious thing that we scarcely ever entirely overlook the great and powerful corporations, while sometimes the welfare and justice to the humble individual are overlooked. I refer to the appropriation for star routes.

I make no charge against the committee of the House. The Post Office Department did not in the first place ask for enough for star service. The committee gave them all they asked for the star routes. Later, and after I had called attention to the lack of sufficiency in the appropriation, the department communicated with the House and Senate committees and suggested an increase, approximately in the amount I had stated in my opinion as necessary, to wit, $300,000. That supplemental estimate was, through inadvertence, I think, overlooked by the Senate committee, and the conferees were without authority to make the increase. It will be necessary for the department to create a deficiency, and I do hope and trust they will not hesitate to do it, for this, the poorest-paid service in the postal service, and about the poorest paid under the flag, is the only part of the postal service that is not taken care of by an increase on account of parcel post in this bill.

The star-route carriers must and, I believe, will eventually be given a fair increase of compensation, but it is to be regretted that it was not done in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to me five minutes?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misapprehension as to the effect of the proposition, which, I think, is easily cleared up by a correct understanding of the situation. The language in the proposition is an increase of 5 per cent per annum, which some gentlemen have feared means an increase the first year of 5 per cent, and then a 5 per cent addition the next year.

As I understand the situation, the contracts with the railroads for carrying the mails are made according to law, and the law provides for so much on a certain basis per annum. The contract is made in accordance with the law, and the contract basis is by the year, not for the full term of four years. The compensation named is not the compensation for the full term of four years, but it is so much per year each year for a period of four years. So that when this item refers to 5 per cent thereof per annum to be added, it is 5 per cent of the amount named in the original contract made according to law, at so much for each year. If the amount is $1,000,000 or $10,000, it is 5 per cent of that each year thereafter that the contract runs, and can not be any more than that.

Mr. GOOD. Suppose the words "per annum" were left out and the contract provides for $100,000 a year, payable monthly; would not the railroad companies receive $105,000 a year for each remaining year of the contract under the provisions of this agreement?

Mr. MANN If the words "per annum" are left out, they might receive 15 per cent the first year. If the total contract price is for the four years and you propose to pay them 5 per cent additional, it might be construed, and probably would be construed, to mean 5 per cent on the contract price for the full period for each year.

Now, this is perfectly plain, that the "5 per cent thereof" is 5 per cent of the annual compensation, because the law provides that the compensation shall be so much per annum upon the amount of mail carried, and there can be no misconstruction of that by anybody.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has read the substitute or heard it read, has he?

Mr MANN. I have both heard it and read it.

Mr MURDOCK. It is permanent law?

Mr. MANN. It is permanent law.

Mr. MURDOCK. So that it does change this system of payment?

Mr. MANN. It does to that extent. It provides a bonus of 5 per cent on these outstanding contracts after July 1, which are not based upon weighing since January 1, for the balance of the period of the contract, unless Congress hereafter changes the law.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does the gentleman think this is the proper time to change the law in that important matter?

Mr. MANN. Do you mean just now?

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes; in this stage of legislation; in conference at the close of the session.

Mr. MANN. I voted against the proposition offered by the gentleman from Kansas the other day because I did not understand it, and said then that I thought it was asking us to pass upon something very quickly without knowledge.

This situation simply amounts to this: Having engaged in a parcel post, which the Government is now assuming will bring to the Government from $30,000,000 to $50,000,000 per annum, we propose to add to the pay of the transportation companies which do most of the work $2,000,000 per annum. That looks to me like a pretty good bargain on behalf of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. I think the gentleman ought to make this correction: That $2,000,000 per annum has been repeated over and over again here. As a matter of fact, we pay the railroads $50,000,000 a year for the transportation of the mails, and 5 per cent of that is $2,500,000.

Mr. MANN. That is all very true, but this does not apply to three of the large States of the Union—New York, Pennsylvania, and including now as a great State the State of New Jersey.

Mr. MURDOCK. But I will say to the gentleman that the inclusion of the weight of the parcel post will be paid for in that section, because there has been a weighing there this spring.

Mr. MANN. Many of them will not be paid for, because the parcel post is growing much more rapidly now than it was at the beginning.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I only wish to say to the House that on a fuller examination of the text of the amendment, I am satisfied that the 5 per cent proviso would not have the cumulative effect suggested; that it refers to a specific sum fixed in the contract weighing and not to a changing, cumulative sum. I believe the amendment is fair to the Government at least and sufficiently certain in meaning to be put in the form of law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the next 20 minutes be occupied in the consideration of bridge bills by unanimous consent, taking up the Senate bills that have passed first.

Mr. MANN. Will not the gentleman modify his request by saying "not exceeding 20 minutes"?

Mr. GARNER. I will say "not to exceed 20 minutes."

Mr. STEENERSON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry. Will that include Senate bills on the calendar whether they are on the Calendar of Unanimous Consent or not?

Mr. GARNER. It will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that a period of time not to exceed 20 minutes shall be devoted to the calling of bridge bills by unanimous consent, those having passed the Senate having preference?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if he can advise me what will be before the House at the end of the 20 minutes?

Mr. GARNER. I have not the information, but I understand there will be sufficient business in the way of conference reports and other matters on the Speaker's table that must be considered.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. If that is true, I want to say that there are some other measures that are not of a private but of a public nature that this House ought to pass on. If this is the only 20 minutes that we are to have to consider bills outside of conference reports——

Mr. MANN. This is not the only time that will be devoted to that purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Texas said that after the 20 minutes the balance of the time would be taken up in conference reports. If that is true it will exclude all other matters.

Mr. MANN. If it was true, it would not make any difference, because the gentleman could not get up anything else within the 20 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Mississippi will not gain any time by objecting to this.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Mississippi has not been able to get much time anyway.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Mississippi gets everything out of the House that he wants.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT WELDON SPRINGS LANDING, MO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 8443) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, Mo.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT MINNEAPOLIS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 8377) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co., and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River in Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minn.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, BELTRAMI COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8536) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in Beltrami County, in the State of Minnesota, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8539) to authorize the St. Louis Belt & Illinois Eastern Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi near the mouth of the Missouri River.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT WELDON SPRINGS, MO.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 8538) to authorize the St. Louis & Western Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Weldon Springs, in the State of Missouri, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The clerks at the desk inform the Chair that they have not the engrossed copies of the bill (S. 8539) to authorize the St. Louis Belt & Eastern Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, nor of the bill (S. 8538), which the gentleman calls up, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at Weldon Springs. The gentleman will have to obtain the engrossed copies, which the Chair supposes are in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Those bills have never been reported by that committee.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I would call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill just read (S. 8538) was passed by the Senate on February 19.

The SPEAKER. That is true, but the engrossed copies of those bills are not at the desk, and they should be here. They must be in the hands of the committee. The gentleman can later take the matter up under suspension of the rules. Without objection, the proceedings of the House by which the bill (S. 8539) to authorize the St. Louis Belt & Illinois Eastern Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the mouth of the Missouri River was passed will be vacated.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

BRIDGE ACROSS HUDSON RIVER, N. Y.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4978, an act to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMILL. Are we proceeding under unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. We are.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, may I not call this bill up under suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. Not at this time.

BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER AT ORANGE, TEX.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 28098) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River, at Orange, Tex.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of H. R. 28000, Private Calendar 288.

The SPEAKER. This is not a bridge bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS CADDO LAKE, LA.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28633) to amend the act approved January 27, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Caddo Lake, in Louisiana."

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WATKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER NEAR WELDON SPRINGS LANDING.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of the bill S. 8538, and that it be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from further consideration of the Weldon Springs bill, and that it be now considered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is this the third bridge bill which the gentleman from Missouri has had passed?

The SPEAKER. No; this is one that was passed and yet not passed.

Mr. MANN. Then this is to pass it twice?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 8538) to authorize the St. Louis & Western Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Weldon Springs Landing, in the State of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of Senate bill 8539.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 8539) to authorize the St. Louis Belt, Illinois & Eastern Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the mouth of the Missouri River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that a similar House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a House bill of similar import will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The 20 minutes has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Are there any more bridge bills not acted upon?

The SPEAKER. Has any gentleman a bridge bill?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have an age-limit bill, if the gentleman will take that instead.

SALE OF BURNT TIMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following House bill with a Senate amendment:

A bill (H. R. 24266) to authorize the sale of burnt timber on the public domain.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment. It is not my bill, but the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands is temporarily out of the room.

Mr. MANN. This matter has been before the House several times and was once vetoed by the President.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have changed it.

Mr. MANN. I am just going to ask what we are doing now. Evidently we do not know, and the gentleman is unable to inform us.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say this——

Mr. MANN. It is a peculiar situation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman will listen. We have undertaken to comply with the suggestions of the President of the United States and pass a bill that would meet with his approval. It has passed the Senate, and I now yield to the chairman of the committee [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. MANN. Now that it has been fixed up to suit the President and the Senate, would it not be proper to let the House know what it is to see whether it suits the House?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly; that should be done. I yield to Mr. FERRIS for an explanation of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the only change the bill makes—I have not it before me as I have only come into the Hall of the House—is a slight Senate amendment which is agreeable to the Secretary of Agriculture. The time the bill passed the House, and at the time the bill was reported, there was a colloquy that took place on the floor between the gentleman from Illinois and those in charge of the bill, and there was some desire on the part of the House to have the jurisdiction remain with the Secretary of Agriculture that he now has, and this amendment only proceeds to leave the jurisdiction and control where it was.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

LIEUT. COL. CONSTANTINE MARRAST PERKINS.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9290, and move to suspend the rules and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9290) for the reinstatement of Lieut. Col. Constantine Marrast Perkins to the active list of the Marine Corps.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN. I object; and I state now that it will require a quorum to consider this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects and serves notice on the House. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] withdraw the bill or not?

Mr. WITHERSPOON. I decline to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WITHERSPOON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] as tellers. Those in favor of seconding the motion will pass between the tellers and be counted.

Mr. WITHERSPOON and Mr. MANN took their places as tellers.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 9.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. WITHERSPOON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my motion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 28775. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 28499. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. Will the Speaker state to the House the message of the Senate in regard to the District of Columbia appropriation bill? The messenger spoke so low that we could not hear.

Mr. MANN. They have agreed to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The Senate agrees to the conference report.

INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTIONS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration and passage the bill S. 8439.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 8439) restricting the issuance of interlocutory injunctions to suspend the enforcement of the statute of a State or of an order made by an administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 266 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, is hereby amended by inserting in line 4, after the words "in the enforcement or execution of such statute," the words "or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State."

At the end of section 266, as so amended, add the following:

"It is further provided, That if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court, of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith."

So that section 266 as amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 266. No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. Whenever such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the governor and to the attorney general of the State, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case. It is further provided that if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing, and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I will say frankly to the gentleman that I have not demanded a second for the purpose of opposing the bill, but in order that it may be explained to the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. I perfectly understood that when the gentleman demanded a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. The gentleman's purpose was good and proper, and I thought an explanation of the measure ought to be made to the House.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is what is known as the Crawford bill, which recently passed the Senate. The history of it is this: Senator CRAWFORD introduced it in the Senate, and when it went to the Judiciary Committee there it was amended and reported, I believe, unanimously by that committee and passed the Senate unanimously. It came to this House and met the unanimous approval of the Committee on the Judiciary here. Some of the particular circumstances calling for this legislation are perhaps happily stated by Gov. Byrne, of South Dakota, in his inaugural address in January last, who said in the course of that address:

> It was the boast of the representatives of the railroads that in 13 minutes after the governor had signed at Pierre the act fixing passenger fares at 2 cents per mile the Federal judge at Sioux Falls had signed his sweeping order restraining the attorney general and all State attorneys from attempting to enforce it. Nearly four years have passed since then, but we have not yet been able to learn from the court whether or not the fares fixed are reasonable. It is now nearly six years since the order of the board fixing 2½ cents per mile as the maximum charge for passenger fares was tied up by injunctions, yet in that time the court has not said whether such order is right or wrong.
> Why should not these matters be tried and settled in our own State courts? Is there a possibility that they would do injustice to any of these corporations? The idea is preposterous. * * * It would seem that no effective regulation of freight and passenger rates within State lines is possible so long as the lower Federal courts are thus permitted to annul and bring to naught all efforts on the part of the people of the State to secure relief.

This law is not a new departure in legislation. It merely seeks to amend the existing law in two particulars. Section 266 of the Judiciary Code is the existing law which this bill seeks to amend.

It seeks to amend, in the first particular, in this way: To put the order of a State railroad commission upon an equality with a statute of a State; in other words, to give the same force and effect to the order of a State railroad commission fixing rates as is accorded under existing law to a State statute.

This judge in South Dakota, having held that the order of a railroad commission, promulgated under the authority of a State statute, was not entitled to be recognized as having the force and effect of a State statute, the first amendment of the section is to give the order of the railroad commission the same standing in court that the statute of a State has.

The second proposition amends this same section by further safeguarding this injunctive process so that it may not be abused. You know now it takes three judges to hear and pass on the application for an injunction. We had that matter before the House heretofore, and we have had it before the Congress repeatedly, and it was finally decided that as to these statutes regulating the rates of railroads—statutes passed by States—the execution should not be enjoined unless three judges sat and heard the application for injunction. That is the existing law. This seeks to amend that further by providing that when an application is contemplated by the railroad to enjoin the execution of a State statute, if proceedings are begun under that State statute to stay it, the State court shall hear and determine the matter involved in the controversy.

That covers such questions as the reasonableness of passenger fares, whether the rate be confiscatory or not, whether it be repugnant to the constitution or not. The State nisi prius court will try it in the first instance, and then, of course, it can be taken to the State appellate court, and then from there brought to the Supreme Court of the United States; whereas we see that under the existing statute out in South Dakota the order of the State commission under the State statute has been suspended by a Federal judge there for six years. He has tied this law up, and boasted that he had done it, with a sweeping injunction issued within 15 minutes after the Legislature of South Dakota had passed a law fixing the passenger rate at 2½ cents a mile.

What we want to do is to give the opportunity for such cases to be heard speedily. It is not the purpose of this amendment of this statute to defeat the ends of justice, but to expedite the administration of public justice.

That is the purpose of it that I have undertaken to show. The reasons for this legislation are perhaps better stated in the report that I had the honor to prepare and present on behalf of the committee to the House, which I shall ask to be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Following is the report referred to:

[House Report No. 1584, Sixty-second Congress, third session.]

RESTRICTING THE ISSUANCE OF INTERLOCUTORY INJUNCTIONS.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany S. 8439:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (S. 8439) restricting the issuance of interlocutory injunctions to suspend the enforcement of the statute of a State or of an order made by an administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State, reports the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This legislation is demanded because a few judges have sometimes hastily or improvidently issued interlocutory injunctions suspending the enforcement of a State statute or an order made by a State railroad commission acting under the authority of the statute of a State and have for an unjustifiably long time held up or prevented the operation of a State statute or an order of a State railroad commission.

In January last, Gov. Byrne, of South Dakota, in his inaugural address, said:

"It was the boast of the representatives of the railroads that in 13 minutes after the governor had signed at Pierre the act fixing passenger fares at 2 cents per mile the Federal judge at Sioux Falls had signed his sweeping order restraining the Attorney General and all State attorneys from attempting to enforce it. Nearly four years have passed since then, but we have not yet been able to learn from the court whether or not the fares fixed are reasonable. It is now nearly six years since the order of the board fixing 2½ cents per mile as the maximum charge for passenger fares was tied up by injunctions, yet in that time the court has not said whether such order is right or wrong.

"Why should not these matters be tried and settled in our own State courts? Is there a possibility that they would do injustice to any of these corporations? The idea is preposterous. * * * It would seem that no effective regulation of freight and passenger rates within States lines is possible so long as the lower Federal courts are thus permitted to annul and bring to naught all efforts on the part of the people of the State to secure relief."

The bill (S. 8439) has passed the Senate. It seeks to correct grave abuses by Federal judges in issuing interlocutory injunctions restraining State railroad commissions from executing the orders promulgated by them. The Federal court in the South Dakota district held that the provisions of section 266 of the Judicial Code were not broad enough to include orders promulgated by railroad commissions, State boards, or other tribunals fixing maximum rates under a State statute. Just complaint is made on account of the action of the Federal court in tying the hands of the railroad commissioners and preventing them from enforcing orders against railroads and express companies. Widespread and earnest protest on the part of the people in that State has resulted.

The committee is of the opinion that the statute should be broadened, so as to prevent this kind of interference with State officials who are performing their duties under the provisions of a statute enacted by the legislature of a State.

The section (266) of the Judicial Code, as it will be amended by this bill by the insertion of the matter shown in italics, will read as follows:

"SEC. 266. No interlocutory injunction suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of a State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute, or in the enforcement or execution of an order made by an administrative board or commission acting under and pursuant to the statutes of such State, shall be issued or granted by any justice of the Supreme Court, or by any district court of the United States, or by any judge thereof, or by any circuit judge acting as district judge, upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of such statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, or to a circuit or district judge, and shall be heard and determined by three judges, of whom at least one shall be a justice of the Supreme Court or a circuit judge, and the other two may be either circuit or district judges, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. Whenever such application as aforesaid is presented to a justice of the Supreme Court, or to a judge, he shall immediately call to his assistance to hear and determine the application two other judges: Provided, however, That one of such three judges shall be a justice of the Supreme Court, or a circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard or determined before at least five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the governor and to the attorney general of the State, and to such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if of opinion that irreparable loss or damage would result to the complainant unless a temporary restraining order is granted, any justice of the Supreme Court, or any circuit or district judge, may grant such temporary restraining order at any time before such hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction, but such temporary restraining order shall remain in force only until the hearing and determination of the application for an interlocutory injunction upon notice as aforesaid. The hearing upon such application for an interlocutory injunction shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and be assigned for a hearing at the earliest practicable day after the expiration of the notice hereinbefore provided for. An appeal may be taken direct to the Supreme Court of the United States from the order granting or denying, after notice and hearing, an interlocutory injunction in such case. It is further provided that if before the final hearing of such application a suit shall have been brought in a court of the State having jurisdiction thereof under the laws of such State, to enforce such statute or order, accompanied by a stay in such State court of proceedings under such statute or order pending the determination of such suit by such State court, all proceedings in any court of the United States to restrain the execution of such statute or order shall be stayed pending the final determination of such suit in the courts of the State. Such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing, and notice of 10 days served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith."

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there is very little more, if anything, to be said as to why this bill should become a law, in view of the very full explanation of the merits of the measure by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

As he has stated, probably the case that emphasizes most why this legislation ought to be enacted originated in my State. This bill was introduced by one of our Senators. The report of the committee quotes from the message of our governor to the legislature when it convened in January of this year, showing the condition that prevails with reference to an interlocutory injunction that was issued some four years ago against the order of the State railway commission that had been made two years before and an act of the legislature passed at that time fixing maximum passenger rates on the railways in South Dakota. While the gentleman from Alabama has read what the governor said in his message to the legislature, I want to again read it:

> It was the boast of the representatives of the railroads that in 13 minutes after the governor had signed at Pierre the act fixing passenger fares at 2 cents per mile the Federal judge at Sioux Falls had signed his sweeping order restraining the Attorney General and all State attorneys from attempting to enforce it. Nearly four years have passed since then, but we have not yet been able to learn from the court whether or not the fares fixed are reasonable. It is now nearly six years since the order of the board fixing 2½ cents per mile as the maximum charge for passenger fares was tied up by injunctions, yet in that time the court has not said whether such order is right or wrong.
> Why should not these matters be tried and settled in our own State courts? Is there a possibility that they would do injustice to any of these corporations? The idea is preposterous. * * * It would seem that no effective regulation of freight and passenger rates within State lines is possible so long as the lower Federal courts are thus permitted to annul and bring to naught all efforts on the part of the people of the State to secure relief.

Owing to the length of time that has elapsed without any final action by the court there is much dissatisfaction on the part of our people, and there is an overwhelming demand for this legislation. The Attorney General and the State officials generally have appealed to me, expressing the earnest hope that before this Congress adjourns this bill or a similar one may be enacted into law, and our legislature passed and sent a memorial to Congress for its enactment. The bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I hope it will pass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has used 13 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in the so-called Mann-Elkins law, which was an amendment to the interstate-commerce act, there was carried a proposition inserted in the Senate by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] in reference to injunctions in Federal courts against State officials in regard to the enforcing of State laws. That amendment was agreed to in conference and became the law, and was subsequently carried in the codification of the judiciary title as section 266.

It is a peculiar thing, by the way, that the reason given by my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] and by the Judiciary Committee, as the principal reason for passing this bill, is the statement made by the governor of South Dakota; for the entire statement of the governor of South Dakota refers to a situation existing prior to the enactment of the Mann-Elkins law and prior to the insertion of section 206 in any form into the laws of the United States. It is hardly sufficient to say that an abuse which existed six years ago, and which was corrected three years ago, is now a reason for additional legislation.

However, I never have been in favor myself of extending the Federal jurisdiction too far, in the first instance, in regard to matters arising in the States under State laws controlling the powers of State officials. There is in every case a method of getting these questions finally into the Supreme Court of the United States, where the State courts render their decisions, either adverse or favorable to the constitutionality of the State law, and there is no necessity in the main of invoking the jurisdiction of the Federal courts for the first decision in the matter. This bill, however, which I think probably ought to pass, is liable to cause some confusion, it seems to me. As I understand the proposition in the bill, it includes, first, orders issued by State commissions, which we assumed were included in the original law, but which the courts have since held do not apply to orders made by commissions under authority of State laws.

Second, it provides that if you have commenced a suit in a Federal court, to enjoin State officials on the ground of the unconstitutionality of a State law, and have progressed with that suit up to the point of having a hearing, but have not commenced the hearing, if anyone in the State is dissatisfied with the probable decision of the Federal court he can thereupon have a suit filed in the State court, and if the State court enters an order staying the execution of the order of the State officials pending the determination of the State courts, that of itself shall operate as a stay of the proceedings in the Federal court and also operate as a stay of any restraining order issued by the Federal courts.

It also provides that such stay may be vacated upon proof made after hearing and notice of 10 days, served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State courts is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith. I take it that, under the terms of this bill, when the suit is filed in the State court the statute itself, without any order of the Federal court, operates as a stay upon all the proceedings in the Federal court and stays the effect of the restraining order of the Federal court.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the gentleman is right in that construction.

Mr. MANN. Apparently, however, this would let the court officials vacate the stay by order.

Mr. CLAYTON. After notice of 10 days, served upon the attorney general of the State, that the suit in the State court is not being prosecuted with diligence and good faith it could be vacated.

Mr. MANN. While, in my judgment, there is no special necessity for the passage of this bill, because the abuses complained of arose before the present law went into effect, I do not think it can do any special harm to pass it.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is not exactly correct in that. This statute is not aimed at those abuses, all of which arose before the law was amended; but one of the recent abuses since the law was amended, requiring three judges to act upon an injunction, is this very ruling of the court that the order of a railroad commission does not have the force and effect of a State statute.

Mr. MANN. I quite agree with the gentleman as to that amendment of the law.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is one reason that calls for this amendment to section 266. As a part of the argument in the case, and as showing abuse of injunctive process by some Federal judges, I quoted the remarks of Gov. Byrne, of South Dakota. The State courts are as competent and as honest as the Federal courts, and these State courts can and will do justice by railroads as they do by other corporations and by the people. It would be a slander on the State courts to say that they will not, and it is a reflection on the people to say that in the States they select incompetent or unfair judges. Sometimes they may make mistakes, but, perhaps, they make no more mistakes in selecting judges than Presidents make in the appointment of judges.

Now, further as to this bill: I would have preferred to have the provisions of the bill, which are embraced in the last two sentences of it, made clearer and more certain, but if I had amended the bill it could not have become a law at this session because the session of Congress will end at noon to-morrow. If this bill does not propose perfect legislation, let it pass now and perfect it hereafter. It is an improvement over existing law.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING.]

Mr. STERLING. I think, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing further to be said in regard to the bill. I do not care for further time. The gentleman from Alabama, I think, has covered every point.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the early part of the year 1912 I had the honor to participate in the proceedings of the meeting called by the President of the United States for the purpose of bringing about and perfecting an organization of the various trades and commercial bodies of the United States.

Nearly 800 of the leading business men of this country participated in that meeting, which was held in the city of Washington. After a year's effort the organization of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America became, and now is, one of the most potential commercial organizations in the world.

Its purposes and works are confined to no single locality nor to any special line of business or trade. In the broadest possible sense it is the one and the only body ever organized in this country whose purpose is to promote and encourage generally the commercial welfare of the Republic.

There is no line of legitimate industry, no department of worthy commercial enterprise, that will not in the natural course of events participate in the benefits arising out of the great work of this body.

In the most eventful and prosperous period in our commercial history this body comes into existence to augment the splendid efforts now being successfully made to make this country the most notable, potential, and creditable figure in the arena of international trade.

It never had, and does not now have, the slightest intention to interfere with or intrude upon the functions of the Government in any of the latter's great work of enlarging the volume of our interstate and foreign trade.

It will bring together the commercial geniuses of the country, harmonize conflicting opinions arising out of misunderstandings, create a harmonious spirit and purpose to pull together to improve trade conditions generally and enlarge our markets and activities abroad, to the end that in all the waiting markets of the world the products of American brains, genius, and labor will be found.

No busier place in the country can be found to-day than in the central offices of this organization in the city of Washington, where there is at work one of the most effective executive and secretarial forces in the country. Harry A. Wheeler, the president chosen for a second time, is one of the most able and esteemed gentlemen in the American business world, and the board of directors and incorporators among the leaders in business in various sections of the country.

The bill itself reads as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25106) to incorporate the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America.

Be it enacted, etc., That Horace H. Allen, Bernard N. Baker, Frederick Bode, A. M. Cooper, C. G. Craddock, A. C. Dixon, John Joy Edson, John H. Fahey, A. B. Farquhar, Everett G. Griggs, H. J. Hodge, P. J. Kruesi, I. H. Kempner, B. F. Kauffman, Albert J. Logan, William D. Mullen, Elias Michael, Ludwig Nissen, Francis F. Prentiss, Lewis W. Parker, John P. Truesdell, J. N. Teal, W. B. Thompson, August H. Vogel, Harry A. Wheeler, George H. Whitcher, Harry T. Wickes, and E. P. Wells, citizens of the United States, members of a voluntary association known as the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, their associates and successors, are hereby constituted a corporation by that name for the purpose of encouraging trade and commercial intercourse among the States, the District of Columbia, the Territories, and insular possessions of the United States of America and with foreign nations; and for these purposes to have, possess, and enjoy the right to establish and maintain headquarters in the District of Columbia; to own only such property, real and personal, for office purposes, as may be necessary to carry on the work of the corporation; and, in general, to do and perform all things necessary to accomplish the purposes of the corporation: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall authorize said corporation to engage in business for its own profit.

SEC. 2. That the right to amend, alter, or repeal this act or any part thereof is hereby expressly reserved.

On that bill the Committee on the Judiciary, after a full hearing, made the following unanimous report:

[House Report No. 854, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Mr. GRAHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 25106:

The Committee on the Judiciary, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 25106) to incorporate the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, report the same back with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

POWER OF CONGRESS TO ISSUE CHARTER.

Under the Constitution Congress clearly has the power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations, and as an incident thereto it necessarily has the power to encourage, facilitate, and promote that which it has the right to regulate. But commerce in this sense means more than mere buying and selling, more than the mere exchange or interchange of commodities. It includes transportation by land and water and it also includes intercourse. Indeed, intercourse is a very essential part of commerce, whether foreign or domestic.

That Congress, under this constitutional provision, has the power to grant charters to corporations for the purpose of directly engaging in commerce is beyond question. Indeed, it has frequently exercised such power and has given to such corporations valuable franchises, conferring upon them important rights, including the right of eminent domain within the States, and it has even given to corporations organized under State laws powers in addition to those conferred by the State.

As the purpose of the corporation proposed in this bill is to encourage trade and commercial intercourse among the States, the District of Columbia, the Territories, and insular possessions of the United States and with foreign nations, in other words as its purpose is to encourage, stimulate, facilitate, and extend our commercial relations, there can be no question as to the right and the power of Congress to grant the proposed charter.

While all concede the power of the Federal Government to grant charters to corporations for the purpose of making profit, there are many who think it questionable policy to do so. This bill contains a proviso "That nothing herein contained shall authorize said corporation to engage in business for its own profit," so that there can be no objection to it on that ground.

PURPOSE OF CORPORATION.

While we have many commercial bodies in the country, known as chambers of commerce and commercial clubs of one sort or another, they are all purely local in their character, intended only to benefit the particular communities in which they are located. We have no organization of a national or quasi national character, such as it is proposed in this bill to organize. The proposed organization would be Federal in its character, its constituent elements being various commerce bodies throughout the country, so that if the purpose be fully realized, it will be thoroughly national and cosmopolitan.

Its possible usefulness is practically unlimited, both as to our domestic and foreign commercial relations.

In the collection, publication, and distribution of the latest commercial statistics alone, it can do incalculable good.

It can and ought to greatly increase the commercial standing and importance of the United States among foreign nations, by materially extending our foreign trade and by creating a higher standard of business ethics.

As Congressman Burke, of Pennsylvania, well said in support of the bill before this committee—

"The purpose of those seeking this charter is to encourage trade and commercial intercourse among the States, Territories, and insular possessions of the United States and with foreign nations by the collection and transmission of information affecting commerce in general and not transactions incident to a single industry or to a few industries in a single State, or a few States, but with reference to all those commercial matters, communities, and commodities in which the American people have or should have an interest, the ultimate object being to enlarge these fields and increase those activities in which American genius and industry should assume that real leadership for which they are so eminently fitted, and as a consequence of which our Nation will be enriched commercially and strengthened politically throughout the world.

"To this end the Congress may fittingly exercise its power. As the Supreme Court in the North River Bridge case declared, 'Congress, being empowered by the Constitution to regulate commerce among the States and to pass laws necessary or proper for carrying into execution any of the powers specifically conferred, may make use of any legitimate means for this end. * * * Congress therefore may create corporations as appropriate means of executing the powers of government,' (153 U. S., 529.)

"The propriety of granting this charter is found in the fact that virtually all the commercial bodies, boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and kindred organizations throughout the United States have planned its organization and are about participating in its activities. In response to the suggestion of the President of the United States, nearly 800 men, prominent in the commercial life of the various States, assembled in Washington on April 15 and 16 last and organized this body, whose activities are to be world-wide. Business integrity and commercial patriotism will both be enhanced, the volume of trade increased, and the means and manner of conducting our commercial affairs improved.

"The purpose is so far from being local or provincial and so clearly beyond the activities and authority usually conferred or contemplated in District of Columbia or State charters, that it manifestly falls within the larger field with which the Congress may deal and properly confer authority for the carrying out of the great purposes in view."

I hope this House will now pass this bill and thereby write upon its records a very creditable and gratifying chapter in our commercial and legislative history.

I yield such time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] as he desires.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that we gave a very liberal hearing to people in favor of this bill. We had gentlemen representing chambers of commerce from well near every State in the Union some months ago, and they succeeded in convincing us that this is a good piece of legislation. It does not cost the Government anything; it does not propose to ever cost the Government anything. It has no power to do any business, and it is not a corporation in that sense. We are merely giving name and dignity to this chamber of commerce by letting them have, under this charter, a central organization for transacting the usual business done by chambers of commerce, to wit, of cultivating a friendly and commercial intercourse between the different States of the Union, between the different cities of the country with other cities, and with the people who do not live in the cities, and to cultivate a commercial semisocial relation with the business people of foreign nations. I think, Mr. Speaker, it will tend to promote not only our interstate business, but I think it will tend to promote our foreign business. The business men of America and every chamber of commerce, I believe, in the United States, thinks that not only will this benefit our commerce, but that it will aid materially in extending our foreign commerce and enlarge our trade relations for the benefit not only of the commercial class itself, but for the benefit of the whole country.

Because, Mr. Speaker, under our Government it is true that whatever benefits one class of our people by extending trade redounds to the good of all. The more foreign trade we have the happier it will be for our people at home.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the Military Academy appropriation bill and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia calls up the conference report on the Military Academy appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1617).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28699) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 5; that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 6, 8, and 9, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment down to and including the words "Provided further," in line 16 and in lieu thereof insert "$360,000: Provided," and after the word "President," at the end of the amendment, insert ": Provided further, That any cadet, or cadets, reinstated under the provisions of this act shall be additional to those otherwise authorized by law"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$10,000" and in lieu thereof insert "$5,000," and after the word "construction," in line 6, insert the words "and completion"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 28699, a bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, make the following statement in writing of the action of the conferees as set out in the accompanying conference report:

Amendment No. 1 provided for an increase of $30,000 in the appropriation for pay of cadets; it also provided for filling vacancies at the Military Academy in a different way from that which now prevails; it also provided for reassembling the court-martial which tried certain cadets and dismissed them from the academy, and the House receded with an amendment restoring the appropriation to the amount fixed by the House, and struck out that part of the amendment providing for filling vacancies at the academy, and amended that part of the amendment restoring certain cadets, by adding the words "Provided further, That any cadet or cadets reinstated under the provisions of this act shall be additional to those otherwise authorized by law."

Amendment No. 2 reduces the amount provided by the House, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 3 inserts the word "detachment," left out inadvertently by the House, and the House recedes.

Amendments Nos. 4 and 5 strike out the pay of two mess sergeants, and the Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 6 increases by $25,000 the appropriation for the completion of the East Academic Building, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 7 provides $10,000 for the construction of a building for instruction purposes at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., in addition to the amount appropriated for that purpose last year, and the House recedes with an amendment cutting down the appropriation by $5,000 and providing that the sums appropriated shall complete the building.

Amendment No. 8 provides that the President, by and with the consent of the Senate, may appoint William W. Prude to the position of second lieutenant of Infantry in the Army and place him on the retired list, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 9 authorizes the Secretary of War to permit John C. Scholtz, a citizen of Venezuela, to receive instructions at the United States Military Academy, and the House recedes.

JAMES HAY,
JAMES L. SLAYDEN,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

CHINESE INDEMNITY.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 137, to amend the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, providing for the remission of a portion of the Chinese indemnity, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 137.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transfer from the sum of $2,000,000 reserved from the "Chinese indemnity, 1900," by provisions of the joint resolution of May 25, 1908, and place to the credit of the fund for "defending suits in claims against the United States" such sums as the Attorney General may from time to time certify to said Secretary as having been expended under his authority and direction in defending claims of citizens of the United States against said Chinese indemnity fund in the Court of Claims of the United States, exclusive of salaries; also that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the credit of the said Court of Claims with the Public Printer, from the said reservation of $2,000,000, upon the certificate of the chief justice of the said court, such sums as the said court may have spent or shall hereafter spend for printing testimony in the trial of the said claims; and further that there shall be allowed as costs in the suits in which recoveries have been or may hereafter be had under the said joint resolution of May 25, 1908, such expenses of the claimants, including reasonable counsel fees, as the said Court of Claims may adjudge to be fair and just, and such costs so allowed shall be paid out of the said reserved sum of $2,000,000 by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the certificate of the said court: Provided, That applications for such costs shall be filed as supplementary motions in the said court by or on behalf of the persons who have recovered judgments under the said joint resolution, within three months from the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is designed to do merely this: It permits certain missionaries and merchants who have recovered through suits in the Court of Claims damages from the so-called Boxer fund to present to the court bills of cost. In the act giving the court jurisdiction over these claim cases it was not provided that the court could consider bills of cost. These people have suffered grievously. None of them, particularly the larger claimants, has recovered within a very considerable sum the amount of his damage.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In a moment. I desire to make my statement first. This does not take any money out of the Treasury of the United States, but on the contrary, will put some money into the Treasury of the United States, because the United States would be one of the claimants before the court to recover its costs. There are $2,000,000 of that fund reserved, more than ample to meet any claims for costs which the court may allow.

This is a delayed act of justice. A bill providing this same privilege passed the other House of Congress in another session. This bill has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. These claimants merely ask Congress to give them permission to go before the Court of Claims and let the Court of Claims determine whether or not they have just cause to ask for costs. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has made somewhat clear the information that I desire, but allow me to ask him at this point who is to determine the matter of the costs?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Court of Claims.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the resolution so expressly provide?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It expressly provides that. This resolution does not give these claimants any money or standing otherwise than the privilege of going before the Court of Claims and permitting the Court of Claims to adjudicate a thing which it could not before, because it was not so provided in the act of jurisdiction.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What is comprehended in the resolution under the name of costs?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I speak particularly of the case that was explained to the Committee on Foreign Affairs by a merchant representing a mercantile house which has been in business for 70 years, which to-day is now the largest shipper of American products to the Far East. That house suffered more largely than any other claimant. They were obliged, in order to present their case to the Court of Claims, to send commissioners to China to gather evidence, of course to employ counsel, all of which charges have been paid in full. They were subjected to many very large costs.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Has not that all been taken into consideration in the award of damages?

Mr. TOWNSEND. On the contrary, the award of damages was cut down very materially by the actual costs which they incurred. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that when this Chinese indemnity fund was established the representatives of the Governments concerned laid down this rule for the administration of the funds: Damages shall be assessed as far as possible with a view to putting Governments, societies, companies, and private individuals back in the position in which they would have been if the antiforeign movement of 1906 had not taken place.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the amount to be awarded as costs come entirely out of this indemnity fund, or may it perhaps fall upon the Treasury?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It will come entirely out of the reserve fund of the indemnity fund, and the United States Government will also undoubtedly collect under this resolution its costs in defending this fund.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the resolution make that limitation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. These claimants under resolution seek to recover attorneys' fees and costs of litigation, as I understand it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The cost, of course, includes the expense of collecting evidence and material they had to submit to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. What they wish is to have paid out of the Chinese indemnity fund all the expenses that they have been put to in the way of attorneys' fees or otherwise in prosecuting their claim. Is not that correct?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not quite, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. What their private wishes may be is not defined in the bill, but the bill very carefully defines this point, that they may submit to the court a bill of costs and permit the court to decide what item, if any in that bill, is a just tax upon this fund.

Mr. MANN. Well, this resolution practically asks the court to allow to these claimants out of the fund now in the Treasury, as I understand it, all their expenses incurred in prosecuting their claims, and further than that these claims were once disallowed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman knows the costs were disallowed, because the act giving the court jurisdiction did not permit the court to allow them.

Mr. MANN. These claims were once disallowed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, I am not aware that is the fact. The gentleman, of course, is an authority upon most things, but that is not as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman just stated they were disallowed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I stated that the court would not take into consideration the bills for the costs incurred because the act giving jurisdiction did not permit them to do so.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking about the cost but the claims themselves.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It only permits those who have recovered to ask these costs.

Mr. MANN. These claims themselves, in the main, as I understand it, were once disallowed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. By the Court of Claims?

Mr. MANN. In determining what claims should be paid growing out of the Boxer insurrection out of the idemnity fund furnished by China there were a number of claims presented, and most of those claims which are involved here are disallowed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, those claims which were disallowed can not appear before the court.

Mr. MANN. Subsequently, owing to other legislation, they were allowed. Having received a second turn of the wheel, receiving an allowance, they now find that the Chinese indemnity fund is not entirely exhausted and now want to get out of that fund all of their expenses in having their claims allowed on a second trial. Does not the gentleman think that goes a little beyond the limit?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman does not think so. The gentleman thinks that the distinguished and experienced gentleman from Illinois is very apt, possibly aided by a temperament and disposition to do so, to make satirical remarks calculated to abash a younger Member, but the facts are these——

Mr. MANN. I disavow any such idea or thought or possibility. I am asking a simple question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The situation has this explanation to a layman's mind. I refer particularly to a case of a witness who appeared before our committee. They had a very large business in the Far East, exclusively in American products. They had introduced and sold into the Far East very many million dollars' worth of southern-made cotton cloth. During the Boxer troubles their shipments were held up, their collections were made impossible, their insurance and interest went on, and the transshipments of their goods was made impossible, and they suffered grievously. This firm of American merchants, who for years had been striving successfully to introduce American goods into the Far East, went before the Court of Claims and recovered not all the damages that they suffered but a part of them, and even that part was not a net recovery, because, of course, they employed expensive lawyers, and they had to employ expensive means for gathering their evidence. They had to go to many ports and interior cities of China to procure this evidence, and the allowance made to them by the court was not a net allowance, because they had to deduct from that the cost imposed upon them by an antiforeign riot in China. The Government secured from China a fund to reimburse the Government, corporations, firms, and individuals. This gentleman who appeared before us represented, as I say, an old and distinguished American merchant firm, the kind of firm that all Americans should be proud of. They are out hundreds of thousands of dollars because of this interruption to their business. They ask Congress simply this: May they go to the Court of Claims and submit to the views of those judges the justice of this claim——

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman how much money did they recover on account of the loss of profit?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not tell the gentleman the items that constituted their claims. I know that in addition to the physical loss they have suffered loss of storage charges, failure to collect insurance and interest, and some physical loss in the way of some shipments that have not been found yet. This loss they suffered by reason of these antiforeign rioters, who, I hope, the gentleman is not trying to protect.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am trying to protect this fund, which I think is somewhat sacred, paid by the Chinese Government, and which we offered to remit to the Chinese Government. Here is a proposition to pay out of that, because we say it does not come out of our Treasury, the attorneys' fees and the cost of litigation, which no one dreams of asking to be paid out of money which does belong to us in the Treasury. I think we ought to be fair enough to treat the new Republic of China as well as we treat ourselves.

Mr. TOWNSEND. This money is already in the Treasury of the United States, a portion of it having been remitted. This balance was held up there, as I understand it, for the purpose of covering additional just claims that might be made against it; and in the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, unanimously expressed, and in the opinion of the body at the other end of this building, it is only right we should give these gentlemen an opportunity to ask the Court of Claims to discover and determine whether they had a just charge against this fund.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I think it is not to the credit of the State Department that it has held back in the Treasury of the United States a sum of money at the request and special instance of one firm who seek to obtain that money to pay their lawyers' fees and court expenses.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not join the gentleman in his efforts to discredit the State Department.

Mr. MANN. I do not endeavor to discredit the State Department. It so often does that itself it does not require any addition from the outside.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think this is only an effort to ask Congress to allow some just claims to be submitted for adjudication to the Court of Claims.

I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Does this bill, if it passes, practically direct the Court of Claims, as is frequently done by legislation, to enter judgment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does not. It permits, I will say to the gentleman, or merely authorizes, the Court of Claims. There is no direction that these costs shall be paid. It is entirely permissive.

Mr. CANNON. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask to have this bill pass—permitting these claimants to file their bills and allow the Court to adjudicate.

Mr. CANNON. On what principle?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That they have been subjected to grievous wrong. They did not bring these riots about, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman's people owned a cotton factory, and it was damaged on account of having to stop manufacturing, would that be a legitimate claim for damages?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly not. These were all adjudicated in the original claims. It is not a claim for further damages. It does not permit them again to be opened up. It merely permits those claimants whose cases have been favorably acted upon by the court to submit to the court a question whether or not they should be allowed out of this fund something of the cost which this antiforeign riot in China imposed upon them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I object.

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the bill H. R. 28775, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, did I not make the motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has announced a half dozen times that conference reports on appropriation bills shall have the right of way.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1022).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 5, 10, 12, 14, 15, 17, 27, 34, 41, 42, 43, 49, 54, 60, 69, 74, 75, 79, 81, 88, 89, 90, 99, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, and 127.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 6, 7, 18, 24, 26, 29, 30, 31, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 44, 45, 46, 48, 51, 52, 53, 61, 73, 76, 77, 78, 82, 85, 87, 91, 92, 98, 104, 105, 106, 107, 111, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 128, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$675,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,575,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That hereafter commissioned officers and pharmacists, and those employees of the service devoting all their time to field work, shall be entitled to hospital relief when taken sick or injured in line of duty"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$220,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"Hereafter vacancies occurring in the membership of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall not be filled until the whole number of members of such board is reduced to five, and thereafter the number of members constituting said board shall not exceed five."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "one-half to be immediately available"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 80: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 80, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$475,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 86: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 86, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "assistant in charge of office, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce, $2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 108: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 100 of the bill, in line 7, strike out "$131,060" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$132,060"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 109: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,464,820"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 110: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 110, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Transpose the matter inserted by said amendment to follow line 18 on page 21 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 112: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "of which sum $4,500 shall be available to print and furnish to the States report-form blanks"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 117: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 117, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of said amendment, before the word "Government," insert "the United States, in," and, after said word "Government," insert the words "or private"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 8, 9, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 28, 33, 47, 50, 55, 57, 58, 59, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, 72, 83, 84, 94, 95, 96, 100, 101, 102, 103, 129, and 130.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended as to each of said amendments in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2: Inserts the provision, proposed by the Senate, providing for the reconstruction of the public building at Charlotte, N. C.; and strikes out the provision, proposed by the Senate, appropriating for and increasing the limit of cost of the public building at Honolulu, Hawaii.

On amendment No. 4: Appropriates $675,000, instead of $700,000 as proposed by the Senate and $650,000 as proposed by the House, for repairs and preservation of public buildings.

On amendments Nos. 5, 6, and 7: Appropriates $2,500 for the marine hospital at Baltimore, Md., $1,000 for the marine hospital at Detroit, Mich., and $5,000, instead of $8,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the marine hospital at Wilmington, Del.

On amendment No. 10: Appropriates $150,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $144,000 as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the Independent Treasury.

On amendment No. 11: Appropriates $2,575,000, instead of $2,600,000 as proposed by the Senate and $2,540,000 as proposed by the House, for operating force for public buildings.

On amendments Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15, and 17, relating to the Public Health Service: Appropriates $547,640, as proposed by the House, for payment of commissioned officers; inserts the provision extending to officers and employees hospital relief when taken sick or injured in line of duty while engaged in field work; appropriates $155,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $164,500 as proposed by the Senate, for the quarantine service; and strikes out the appropriation of $16,000, proposed by the Senate, for securing current information regarding occurrence of epidemics.

On amendment No. 18: Inserts the provision proposed by the Senate, authorizing employment of technical services in connection with the central heating, lighting, and power plant without reference to civil-service laws.

On amendments Nos. 24 and 25, relating to the Interstate Commerce Commission: Appropriates $5,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $3,500, as proposed by the House, for the salary of the secretary, and $220,000, instead of $225,000, as proposed by the Senate, and $210,000, as proposed by the House, for locomotive inspection.

On amendment No. 26: Authorizes the payment of $7,245 for transportation of American citizens fleeing from danger in Mexico.

On amendment No. 27: Appropriates $120,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $147,000, as proposed by the Senate, for maintenance of national cemeteries.

On amendment Nos. 29, 30, 31, and 32: Appropriates $125,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, for improvement of Yellowstone Park, and $75,000, as proposed by the House, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the Senate, for widening and improving roads in that park.

On amendment No. 34: Appropriates $2,500, as proposed by the House, for plans for Meridian Hill Park, instead of $25,000 for the improvement of the park, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 35: Makes the appropriation for the Lincoln Memorial immediately available.

On amendment No. 36: Appropriates $7,500, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $5,000, as proposed by the House, for maps for the War Department.

On amendments Nos. 37, 38, and 39: Appropriates $37,500 for a chapel and amusement hall for the Battle Mountain Sanitarium at Hot Springs, S. Dak., as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 40: Inserts the provision with reference to the appointment of members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers modified so as to prevent the filling of vacancies hereafter occurring in that board.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to get some information about this conference report before the question is put. There are two matters that I want to inquire about, if the Speaker will permit. One is amendment No. 117, providing for the construction in Government yards of two colliers, not to exceed in cost $1,000,000 each. Does that item stay in the bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does, in a modified form. It provides for their "construction in the United States, in Government or private yards."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not see "private yards" in the amendment in the copy I have.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate struck out the word "purchase." That would compel their construction in Government yards. The Senate did so on the theory that if that word remained in the bill it would be possible to buy foreign-built ships.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not intend to delay the gentleman at all. I want only to get the facts, so that we can understand what the situation is. As this bill comes back from conference, it provides for the construction of two colliers, not to exceed in cost $1,000,000 each, and that they are to be built in Government yards. Is that the fact?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. In Government or in private yards. That Senate amendment has been modified in conference to include private yards.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is one other question. On page 207 there is an amendment relating to the exposition at Nashville—the Nashville Conservation Exposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The item is in disagreement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has not been agreed to?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has not. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question. In the bill as it passed the House the provision for two colliers at a million dollars each was stricken out on a point of order. Is that inserted in this?

Mr FITZGERALD. It is, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CULLOP. Just as it was in the House bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In a little different form. It provides for their "construction in the United States, in Government or in private yards," changing it so they must be constructed in the United States. That removes any doubt as to whether a foreign-built ship could be acquired.

Mr. RODDENBERY. There is no purchase clause or optional purchase clause?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. They will be built by contract. I will read the exact language, so that the gentleman will have it:

Including the construction in the United States, in Government or private yards.

Mr. CULLOP. The distinction, then, between this and the provision that was in the House bill is the one of purchase, is it?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think there is any real difference. The Senate committee reported the provision as it was in the House bill, but the Senate struck out the word "purchase." That would have compelled the construction in Government yards. The policy has always been to hold the private yards and Government yards as a check against each other, so as to regulate prices. The word "purchase" was stricken out in the Senate on the theory that otherwise a foreign-built vessel could be purchased under the original language. To make it clear, the provision was modified so as to provide for the construction of these colliers in the United States, either in Government yards or in private yards. That is the difference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to further insist upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments which were not included in the report. They are noted in the statement accompanying the conference report, which has been reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to further insist on the amendments not included in the conference report and to agree to a further conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What are the items now in disagreement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Amendment No. 3, providing for the location of a building for the Department of State.

Amendments Nos. 8 and 9, relative to the appointment of cadets in the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Amendment No. 56, making available the epidemic fund for the establishment of dispensaries for certain purposes in connection with the Public Health Service.

Amendments Nos. 20 to 23, inclusive, relating to the addition made for the Zoological Park.

Amendment No. 28, to enlarge Chattanooga and Chickamauga Park.

Amendment No. 33, appropriating $150,000 for the Crater Lake National Park.

Amendment No. 47, enlarging the Capitol Grounds. The Senate substituted $2,323,000 for the $500,000 proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 50, boundary claims in New Mexico. That is an item affecting the General Land Office.

Amendments Nos. 55 and 57, increasing the appropriation $150,000 for the gauging of streams.

Amendments Nos. 58 and 59, relative to the work of the Bureau of Mines, increasing the investigations into metallurgical mining, $100,000.

Amendment No. 62, medical relief in Alaska.

Amendment No. 63, appropriating $237,000 for a sewerage system in Hot Springs, Ark.

Amendment No. 64, the addition of $113,000 for the Glacier National Park.

Amendments Nos. 65, 66, 67, 68, 70, 71, and 72 are all items relating to the Yosemite, Mount Rainier, Crater Lake, Wind Cave, and Platte National Parks.

Amendments Nos. 80 and 83 are two legislative items relative to the Lighthouse Service, which have been included in the bill that passed the House to-day.

Amendments Nos. 95 and 96, two fish hatcheries.

Amendments Nos. 100 and 101, International Congress on School Hygiene.

Amendment No. 102, an international joint commission item of $100,000.

Amendment No. 103, payment to persons injured by Mexicans, $72,000.

Amendment No. 129, the Panama and Pacific Exposition item, $1,500,000.

Amendment No. 130, National Conservation Exposition, $250,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I assume from the statement that probably the most serious likelihood of a disagreement for any length of time would be on the two exposition items.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is on one exposition. I think we can probably get together on the other.

Mr. MANN. I do not know which one the gentleman refers to. I hope myself that the conferees will get together upon the National Conservation Exposition, and I would be quite satisfied if they could get together on the California exposition item by splitting the difference between the nothing which the House appropriated and the $1,500,000 appropriated by the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am unable to speak for the Senate.

Mr. MANN. I had thought of testing the sentiment of the House by offering either a motion to concur with an amendment or instructions, but as the attendance in the House at this moment is not very large possibly that would not be wise.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the main difficulty about the San Francisco exposition item, in my opinion, is the question of amount. If the two Houses could be reconciled as to the amount that should be appropriated for this purpose, undoubtedly the details of the item could be worked out. After my experience, during most of last night in conference, there seems to be so radical a difference of opinion as to what would be an appropriate sum to provide such an exhibit as the United States might properly make at a great exposition that until some common ground is reached I do not believe it is possible to reach an agreement.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman mean to say that all the conferees are agreed that there should be an exhibit by the United States Government, paid for by the United States Government, at San Francisco?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think that is entirely correct. Some of the conferees believe it is appropriate that at the San Francisco exposition there should be an exhibit made by the Government of the United States. Some of them do not believe there ought to be, but they might agree to such an item on the theory that in the adjustment of these differences it is necessary to make concessions on the one side and the other provided it would be in such form as to make their agreement possible.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is the gentleman asking unanimous consent to disagree on these amendments?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have moved to disagree.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. To all simultaneously?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think that requires unanimous consent to disagree to all simultaneously, and I hope, before the vote is taken, the gentleman will yield five minutes to me.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman can obtain a separate vote.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think so, too; but what I wish is five minutes' debate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman five minutes now.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this question of an appropriation for San Francisco for a Government exhibit goes far deeper than the surface. The fact is the people in control of the San Francisco exhibition and the Members of Congress from California came to this House and said that they would not ask for any appropriation for any such exhibit; that if they had any Government exhibit they would pay for it themselves.

It is not wise to permit persons representing a great exhibition company to come before Congress, persuade us by their definite pledges to vote to establish an exhibition in San Francisco, and then laugh in their sleeves as they gaily repudiate their promises. "Oh," they say, "these Members of Congress do not dare to exact a fulfillment of our promises; they do not dare to stand up in their boots." Mr. Speaker, we ought to answer something like this: "You said you were not coming back here for anything in the nature of an appropriation; you have broken your faith, but we are going to hold you to your original agreement." I can hear them say: "We always knew those Congressmen were weaklings. They do not dare to come out and face the music; but we can make them crumple up on the first attempt."

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman from New York state what is the international commission for which the Senate has asked $100,000?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is the same commission about which there was a controversy. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, when the gentlemen in charge of the exposition in San Francisco stated that they would not ask for a dollar they meant every word they said. New conditions have arisen since that time, conditions that they did not foresee. What are these new conditions?

Last October, 17 of the European nations held a conference in the city of Berlin and agreed upon an exposition treaty which recites the conditions upon which these nations will exhibit at any international exposition. We could not foresee that such a condition would arise and nobody else could foresee that such a condition would arise.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentlemen representing New Orleans saw that.

Mr. KAHN. They did not know it and nobody else knew it.

Mr. ANDERSON. They made representations on that basis.

Mr. KAHN. The conference at Berlin was only held in October of last year, and the matter of designating San Francisco as the exposition city to celebrate the completion of the Panama Canal was acted upon in January, 1911. Now, some of the great nations of Europe, such as Germany, Russia, and Austria, are holding back their acceptances to see whether this Government will participate in that exposition or not.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not; I have only five minutes. The people of California have raised $20,000,000 for this exposition; that is, the State, the city of San Francisco, the counties, and the personal contributors have raised that amount. No other State has done so much for itself under similar circumstances. The people of San Francisco had had a disaster the like of which the world had not seen, and yet they were willing to pay every dollar of the expense of this exposition. The people of California this very year have been hit by a disaster that cost them from thirty to fifty million dollars in the destruction of an enormous percentage of their citrus-fruit crop, and yet they do not complain, but are willing to pay their share. All that is being asked of our Government is adequate participation, in order that the European Governments will accept the invitation of the Government of the United States. That is all there is to it.

In these matters European countries are apt to gauge their own participation by the extent of the participation of the host government. At Chicago, practically a million and a half dollars was paid for a Government exhibit. At St. Louis, $1,579,000 was given for a Government exhibit. At Portland, Oreg., nearly $500,000 was given for a Government exhibit; and that was a comparatively small exposition, not international in character or in scope.

The other two, Chicago and St. Louis, held great international expositions worthy of the people of the United States, and they cost this Government many millions of dollars in the shape of gifts and loans in addition to Government participation. The people of California do not ask for a gift, they do not ask for any loan. All that has been asked is Government participation, and surely the people of the United States represented in Congress want to see that exposition an honor to the people of the United States. San Francisco is willing to foot the bills as hostess on behalf of the American people. Her citizens simply ask their countrymen to set an example to the large European nations in the way of Government participation. They would not ask that if they had not found out since our Government's invitation was extended that foreign governments expect this Government to participate. It seems to me that where the people of a community and of a State are willing to do so much for themselves, it is not asking too much to have this Government, in order to aid them in making the exposition a success, give them a measure of appropriation for a Government exhibit that will be worthy of the Nation and worthy of the people who have done so much for themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from New York to yield me two minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I read from what the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], said before the Committee on Industrial Arts:

> In behalf of San Francisco, in behalf of our delegation, and in behalf of the people of California, I repeat, without equivocation, and with no mental reservation, that we do not propose at any time to ask for a single cent of money in any way, shape, or manner for this exposition.

Mr. Speaker, when the people from New Orleans protested that ultimately San Francisco would ask for a Government exhibit, these Californians repeated again and again that they would do nothing of the sort. On the strength of that promise I voted with San Francisco. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], on the floor of this House said that he voted for San Francisco for the same reason. Mr. Speaker, are we going to let a congress of nations tell us how we should have our expositions run? I do not believe that it is any uncertainty as to a United States Government exhibit which causes foreign nations to hold off on the question of the San Francisco Exposition. I understand that they are holding off because a question with regard to unequal tolls on the Panama Canal has arisen since last winter. What reason is there to think that the fair needs any Government exhibit? Let me read you what the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] said about that at the hearing on January 16, 1911:

> There have been Government exhibits at practically every exposition held in this country; it is not a novelty. It is nothing new. It does not add much to the success or failure of an exposition. It is frequently asked for in order to get a big sum of money to help build up an exposition and make a showing. We have $17,500,000, as much as Chicago had to put up her exposition, and we do not need the Government's exhibit to make ours a success.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, when I said that I believed absolutely that the exposition company could get along without Government participation I meant every word I uttered. And the gentlemen who represented the exposition company meant every word of it. But the conditions that have arisen since then could not have been foreseen. We find now that the foreign nations are holding off because our own Government has not yet done anything. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about the Panama Canal tolls being responsible for the failure of some of the larger countries of Europe to accept the invitation up to the present time. England is the only country in Europe that has made any protest on that score, and England has given a tentative acceptance of the invitation that this Government has extended; but I was reliably informed by the learned gentleman who is in charge of the Field Museum in Chicago, who is probably the best informed man on international expositions in this country, and who is a constituent of the distinguished minority leader of this House, when he was last in Washington, that it was entirely due to the fact that this Government had not given any intimation as to what it would do that the countries of Europe are holding off.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, one of the most important bills now pending is H. R. 22143.

This bill provides for the granting of absolute independence to the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands in a period of about eight years.

I agree with the author in independence of the Philippine Islands, but I disagree as to some of the details.

In the first place, I believe that as long as we remain in the islands and exercise sovereignty over them, for our own protection and for the interest of the Filipino people, as well as our duty to foreign residents, we should continue to exercise absolute control over the islands, as we do now, gradually filling the positions now provided for by law with natives of the islands, so that when the reins of Government are finally placed in the hands of the Filipino people themselves, after they have adopted their constitution and it has received the approval of our Congress, and we turn the Government over to the Filipinos themselves, we would then sever all connections with the islands, except the retention of naval stations, simply confining ourselves, as far as activity in the Philippines is concerned, to the same duties we have in other countries, to wit, protecting the lives and property of American citizens.

I do not agree with some of my colleagues who are advocating independence for the islands in their statement that the affairs of the Philippine Islands have been mismanaged.

I have served under every administration in the Philippines, from Gen. Otis to our present Governor General, W. Cameron Forbes, and I know that each and all of these gentlemen have been actuated by the loftiest motives and have done what they believed to be best for the Filipino people themselves.

I believe that history records no similar instance where an army was compelled to carry on war as we did in the Philippines and in many instances encountered treachery, and then as soon as peace was sufficiently established to make it possible, not only proceeded forthwith to establish local government with Filipino people themselves in charge, but rendered them every possible assistance. Yet all this sort of humanitarian work had already been started by our military authorities long before the Taft Commission came to the islands to continue it.

When Gen. MacArthur was Governor General, an order known as General Order No. 40, was promulgated by the Governor General authorizing the establishment of civil government in municipalities where the commanding officer believed it was feasible, and in many instances soldiers were detailed to teach school.

The officials appointed were always the most prominent among the Filipino people themselves, and, as a rule, they were recommended to the commanding officer by a mass meeting of the property holders.

In the fall of 1900 a civil commission of five members, headed by the Hon. William H. Taft, now President of the United States, was sent to the Philippines to organize a civil government as soon as the military authorities should certify that law and order had been sufficiently established to permit the organization of civil government. Early in 1901 this commission commenced the organization of different provincial governments, and on the 4th day of July, 1901, the executive authority was transferred from the American military Governor General to the first civil governor—William H. Taft—the military governor, through his military subordinates, retaining control over such Provinces as had not yet been sufficiently pacified to organize civil government in them. The work of the Taft Commission, together with the firm policy of the military authorities, soon resulted in either the capture or the surrender of all of the insurgent forces. On the 4th day of July, 1902, when the civil governor was given the title of Governor General and assumed control of civil affairs of the islands, all political prisoners who took the oath of allegiance, including the former president, Aguinaldo, and his associates, were released, those desiring to remain in the Philippine Islands being required to take the oath of allegiance, and those not desiring to remain being allowed to depart to other countries. As a matter of fact, practically all of them took the oath and have since given great aid to the constituted authorities.

I want to compliment, in the highest terms, President Taft for his work as the first civil governor of the Philippines. To him and his two immediate successors in the great office of governor of those islands, Gen. Luke E. Wright and Hon. Henry C. Ide, the Filipino people owe an official debt of gratitude. They have all had constantly in view the welfare of the masses of the Filipino people. Laws were enacted only after consulting and advising with representative Filipinos, and at their earnest request the commission was enlarged and three prominent Filipinos added to it. The old Spanish laws were followed, except where it was necessary to make changes that were beneficial to the people themselves.

In all instances the municipal officials were elected by the people. The first provincial officials were appointed by the Governor General and confirmed by the commission, but in each case the commission followed the advice of the Filipino people and, where possible, appointed a Filipino governor; and where an American was appointed it was at the request of the Filipino people themselves.

At the present time not only the municipal officials in the various Provinces of the Archipelago, but the governor in each Province, and one of the three members who make up the provincial board of each Province are elected themselves by a popular vote. Qualifications for being a voter are that a man shall be able to read and write either Spanish or English or own $500 worth of property upon which he pays tax. The ballot is absolutely secret. Judges of elections and clerks are appointed as in this country, legal voters are registered, and each qualified voter is handed a ticket by the judges of the election which simply has the names of the positions that the elector may vote for. Private booths are provided, and each voter takes his place in the booth and makes out his ballot. In case he is a taxpayer and not able to write, one clerk is sent to write out his ticket and the other, who is usually of a different political party, is sent to see that it is written out as the voter desires. Practically everyone who has the right to vote exercises it, although the per cent is comparatively small.

The work done under the successive administrations of our American Governor Generals has been remarkable. There has been some complaint of extravagance, and it is possible that it may not have been wholly unjustified, but I am satisfied that in no country in the world has there been a higher degree of honesty and efficiency than has been displayed by the Philippine Commission and their subordinates. Roads have been built, harbors improved, and schools established. To-day there are over a half million Filipino children in school, and to-day English is more generally spoken, especially among the young people, than Spanish ever was.

Great improvements have been made by the board of health, especially in Manila and larger towns, and in favoring, as I do, absolute independence of the islands, I do not do so on the ground that we have been unfair to the Filipino people. I believe that our occupying the islands has been a blessing to them, and I am satisfied when we haul down our flag to set up in its stead the flag of a republic we have cradled, all Americans can be proud of what they have contributed in establishing another republic upon the face of the globe. It may be that the Filipino people will have trouble at first in maintaining a stable government. It may be, and probably will be, that their Government will run on different lines from ours. They belong to another race of people, and a government under which they would be happy and contented might not suit an Anglo-Saxon.

Almost 95 per cent of the Filipino people are in favor of independence of their country, and giving it to them we will make them our friends and allies. Should we refuse to give them their independence, especially in view of the fact that the party that is to assume control of the Government after the 4th of March has repeatedly pledged itself to give them their independence, serious dissatisfaction among the people of the islands would result, and, in my opinion, would compel us to maintain a large Army and go to great expense in holding the people in subjection.

Why should we desire to retain the Philippines? In time of peace they are an expense to us. If we should become involved in war with another country, they would be a weakness to us. They are 7,000 miles from our coast, populated by an alien race, with habits and customs entirely different from ours. Climatic conditions are such that Americans can not live there permanently. Wage conditions are such that the average American citizen would not want to go there. And less than 1,000 Americans would remain there after our withdrawal.

I have just read a speech by the Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, of New York, in which he includes an article written by Frank H. Clark on the independence of the Philippines. With Mr. Clark's statement in regard to the benefits we have rendered the Philippines I heartily agree, but when he speaks of 99 per cent being incapable of understanding self-government, he is entirely mistaken. The Mololos Congress, called by Aguinaldo and composed of nearly 100 members, the majority of whom were college graduates, formed a constitution almost like our own.

We have given, according to the latest report of the Governor General of the Philippines, a majority of the civil positions in the islands to the Filipino people. The chief justice, several members of the Philippine Commission, and a majority of the judiciary of the islands are Filipinos. So that when anyone states that 90 per cent of the Philippines are ignorant and incapacitated for self-government, he is not familiar with conditions in the Philippines or else he is deliberately telling an untruth.

I sincerely hope that my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House, who has given a great deal of study to this question of Philippine independence and Filipino capacity for self-government, will be willing to change that portion of his bill which creates the Philippine republic at once and allows the President of the United States to name a provisional president of the Philippines, and also that part of the bill which practically enacts a constitution for the Philippines. I believe that the safeguarding of our interests and the interests of the Filipino people themselves demands that for the eight years intervening before independence is given to the people of the islands governmental affairs there can best be handled by the commission appointed by the President under existing laws. I also believe that Congress ought not to attempt to form a constitution that the Filipino people, and not we, have to live under. I believe that their constitution ought to be submitted to our Congress for approval. I believe that in the bill proposing independence for the Philippines we should require them to put certain things in their constitution, such as a guaranty that the citizens of our country should be treated exactly as the citizens of their country in regard to taxation, and so forth. Yet, as to the tenure of office of the president of the proposed republic, or the cabinet officers they should have, or how often elections should be held, and so forth, should be left entirely to the Filipino people to decide when they hold a constitutional convention, which, I believe, whatever bill we pass should provide for the holding of. In other words, as long as we remain in the Philippines and are responsible to the nations of the world for maintenance of law and order we ought to have the power to do so. Then when we haul down our flag and set the new republic up in business for itself, we can withdraw our Army, except such part of it as may be retained for our naval stations, and thereafter we ought to take no other than a friendly interest in their affairs, exercising, of course, the same rights that we would in any other country to safeguard the lives and property of our subjects.

Now, Mr. Speaker, almost everyone that I have talked with is in favor of giving the Philippines their independence sooner or later. Our distinguished President, who is an able and conscientious man and who has given this matter a great deal of thought, believes that the time has not yet arrived when we should set a definite date. Our distinguished ex-President, Col. Roosevelt, is in favor of giving these people their independence, and when we do retire he believes that we should cease to exercise any control or responsibility over the inhabitants of these islands, but he doubts very much if eight years from now is not too early. Another very distinguished American citizen who has been the standard bearer of his party for three times, who has visited the Philippine Islands, and given this matter a great deal of thought, believes that we should declare our intentions at once and set some definite time when we should turn the islands over to the Filipino people themselves.

Many books have been written on the Philippines, the one that has had the widest circulation being, I believe, Foreman's, written in 1897-98. Mr. Foreman is an Englishman who lived in the Philippines for many years immediately preceding the American occupation.

The only American author who seems to understand the situation is Judge James H. Blount, who recently published a book entitled "The American Occupation of the Philippines, 1898-1912." Judge Blount was an officer of the Volunteer Army from 1899 to 1901, at the same time I was, and served as judge of the court of first instance out there from 1901 to 1905. He favors Philippine independence, but believes that the details should be worked out by the commission that the President sends to the islands, instead of Congress. His book has been commended by many men who have given the Philippines some thought, and especially by Col. Bryan, who has recommended that the Members of Congress read it, and complimented the writer upon his knowledge of the situation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you will pardon me, I will refer briefly to my own experience in the Philippines.

I resigned as sheriff of my home county on August 11, 1899, to accept a commission as lieutenant in the Eleventh Volunteer Cavalry, and proceeded that fall to the Philippines, where my regiment was assigned to duty under the late lamented Gen. Lawton. Early in January, 1900, I was appointed provost marshal and provost judge in Cavite Province, and organized civil government in the town of Naic, under general order No. 40, issued by Gen. MacArthur, then Governor General of the Philippines. This was long before the civil commission, headed by President Taft, had arrived in the islands. Later on I was promoted and assigned to command Troop K, Eleventh Cavalry, and in the spring of 1901, when my regiment returned to the United States, I was detailed by the Governor General, at the request of the Philippine Commission, headed by Judge Taft, as the first American civil governor of the Province of Ambos Camarines. This position I held until civil government was organized in the city of Manila on August 7, 1901, when I was appointed the first chief of police of the city of Manila under civil government, and was given authority by the Civil Commission to draw such rules and regulations as I might deem best for my command. After serving a little over a year as chief of police, I resigned that position with the intention of going into business for myself. My health compelled me to return to the United States in 1903.

Immediately upon my return to the islands I was appointed by the then Governor General, Hon. Luke E. Wright, as governor of the Province of Isabela, in the extreme northern part of the islands. I remained as governor of that Province until law and order was restored, in April, 1905, when I was transferred to the Province of Samar as governor.

Conditions were very bad in Samar. Thousands of misguided people were in the mountains, defying the authority of the Government, and stern measures were necessary in order to restore law and order, but at the expiration of two years conditions were such that I could go from one end of the Province to the other without being accompanied by an escort. Roads, trails, telephone and telegraph lines were established, schoolhouses were built, teachers were employed, and the Province to-day is happy and prosperous.

Upon my leaving Samar in 1907 to become governor of my home State, the assembly of presidentes of Samar, by a unanimous vote, made me an adopted son of the Province, and the Philippine Commission passed a resolution thanking me in the highest terms for the service I had rendered in the islands.

Without being egotistical I can say that I had the confidence of the commission sent there by the President, and I think I had the respect and affection of the Filipinos themselves during my entire residence among them. They always treated me with uniform courtesy and respect, and my personal relations among the people all over the islands, both while I served in the Army and while I was civil governor, were always pleasant and agreeable. They are a generous people, and appreciate in an unusual degree the slightest acts of courtesy and kindness. And although I do not contend for one moment that these people could establish a government that would be stable and have as good laws and be as capably administered as our own, I do believe that as long as an overwhelming majority of their people want their independence the government they would establish would be more satisfactory to them than any government by an alien race.

And as long as the inhabitants themselves want independence, let us give it to them. Certainly, in view of all the circumstances, the distance of the country from our shores, the climatic conditions there, and the character of the people, it is to our interest to set them up for themselves, and let them "pursue happiness in their own way."

As I will not be a Member of the next House, which will act on this bill, I sincerely hope that my colleagues, who are present here to-day, and who will be Members of the next House, will see their way clear to take our flag down in the Philippines as soon as they possibly can, but not by barter or trade, but to give way to the flag of a sister Republic.

If we ever do want to expand, we should expand in a territory contiguous to us, where climatic conditions are practically the same as they are in our country, where a large number of Americans are engaged in business, and where hundreds of millions of dollars of American capital are invested, in a country in which the people have shown, in the last few months, their incapacity for self-government, and where the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine makes it the duty of our country to see that the lives and property, not only of our own subjects, but of the other powers of the world, are protected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the conferees on the part of the House to retain this item in favor of the National Conservation Exposition in the bill, if the Panama Canal Exposition item is retained. In other words, I ask you to make no discrimination in this matter. The National Conservation Exposition proposition was investigated by a subcommittee from the House Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, making a visit to Knoxville to look it over. The full committee adopted their report. This proposition has the unanimous indorsement of the House committee and the unanimous approval of the Senate Committee on Industrial Expositions. We have expended in expositions out of the National Treasury $29,000,000. Of that amount $3,400,000 went south of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers. More than $2,000,000 were spent in exhibits in foreign countries. Over $24,000,000 was expended north of the Potomac and west of the Ohio River.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman believe that appropriations ought to be made upon a geographical basis?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; but I think that when the South has a talented and able member [Mr. SHERLEY] on the committee of conference from Kentucky, the sister State of Tennessee, he ought to listen to the appeal for fair treatment for Tennessee and the balance of the South. What does this exposition mean? Mr. Speaker, in order that the House may know in a few concrete words what it is I send to the Clerk's desk a telegram from the mayor of Knoxville, Tenn., to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

National Conservation Exposition offers opportunity for Government to demonstrate importance of conserving natural resources of United States and for promoting work of sane development and wise use of resources. Exposition designed to illustrate by example what Government through various departments teaches by precept. To secure cooperation of millions of farmers and landowners in work of making resources perpetual sources of wealth principal object of this affair. Exposition grounds cover 100 acres, 8 large buildings completed, 3 additional buildings planned and under construction. Many States will make displays. Government participation will make it great success for whole country. Will deeply appreciate your influence in securing passage of bill for appropriation which has passed Senate.

S. G. HEISKELL,
Mayor of Knoxville.

Now, I wish to say to the House that the Southern Commercial Congress, with an attendance of over 2,500 representative citizens from all the Southern States, adopted unanimously resolutions indorsing this exposition. The National Conservation Congress, held at Indianapolis, Ind., last summer, with an attendance from 38 States in the Union, passed unanimously a resolution favoring this exposition. The Southern Editorial Association, with representatives from the press from 16 Southern States, in their last annual meeting, by a unanimous vote, also indorsed this exposition. Cooperative boards have been appointed in practically every State in the South; and I ask of the membership of this House if we believe, as the three parties declared in their platforms, in the conservation of national resources, then help us to demonstrate in a practical way the usefulness and the value of it to the people of this country by this small appropriation of $250,000. Mr. Speaker, it would be unfair to longer discriminate against the South in the matter of appropriating money out of the National Treasury for expositions, and I hope no exception will be made in this case. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman from New York yield me three minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I wish just to say a word in regard to the statements made here that Members of the House were deceived by representations by the Members from California or from others who made the statement that there would be no request for a Government appropriation. When the exposition was held at Seattle I made exactly the same statement that I would never ask for an appropriation from the Government, and if any appropriation was proposed I would stand upon the floor and oppose it. I kept that promise, and yet, without my saying a word or seeking an appropriation, Congress did make an appropriation of $600,000 for a Government exhibit. No one then said that that was in violation of the agreement that had been made. The gentleman from Massachusetts was perfectly familiar with the precedent and so was my learned friend from Illinois; and having that before them, if they had the opinion that the statements that were being made by the gentlemen representing the exposition at California meant that no appropriation for a Government exhibit would be sought they should have had that point made perfectly clear. It is hard for me to understand how these two distinguished gentlemen were misled by the statements made, for I had made the same statement repeatedly, and then, without any solicitation on my part, Congress gave the Seattle exposition $600,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield me three minutes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, my distinguished friend from Washington says when he was asking for the Seattle exposition he said that he would not only not favor an appropriation for the exposition, but if one were proposed that he would rise on the floor and oppose it, and then says, with naïve innocence which is beyond my comprehension, somebody else proposed $600,000, and that nobody took his statement seriously; that nobody believed what he said to the House would come about, and he did not rise to oppose it, and nobody expressed any wonder that he had not risen and opposed the proposition which he had said he would have done. My distinguished friend from Washington is apt to deal in hyperbole and is not always careful in the strength of the language which he uses, but we are used to him. We love him, and we do not always take his promises as exactly what he intends to perform. However, as to the Seattle exposition, there were not two rivals contending. Here in this case there were two rivals contending, one asking for $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit and the other declaring that it wanted nothing, and in other respects they were on an equal footing; and because one asked for $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit and the other declared it asked for no money, Congress chose the one that asked for no money. And it seems to me now, when the gentleman comes assuring us that they ought not to be taken seriously in that statement, that we ought not to have given credit to what they said, that we ought not to have any faith in their representations, that we ought not to believe what they tell us, it seems to me they ought to be at least modest enough to take a little less money than they asked for at the time the decision was made. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, we never had a better illustration of the danger of precedents than is shown by this situation. I have had a great many of my friends come to me with the statement that if the conferees agreed to anything for San Francisco they must agree to something for Knoxville, and that has been supplemented with the statement that we should not play favorites and that one part of the country should not be discriminated against. I want to say, incidentally, there is still a third exposition claim before the conferees, and that is the one at Buffalo; so we have the North, the West, and the South in a race as to which can get proportionately the most out of the Public Treasury.

For my part I believe it is the duty of a conferee to reflect the judgment of the House that appoints him, and I, for one, shall try in my action on this bill to reflect that sentiment as I can gather it from a discussion, private talk, or vote. I am a southern man, and yet I would be ashamed of my southern lineage if because I was a Southerner I voted for a proposition in the South that I did not think could stand on its own feet, whether it was in the South or anywhere else. [Applause.] And it was for that reason I asked the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] whether he believed in geographical appropriations.

Now, the situation as to Knoxville and San Francisco is very different.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. In a moment, and then I will yield to the gentleman. Whether we like it or not, the exposition in San Francisco partakes of a national nature as the result of the action of Congress. The Knoxville Exposition is a credit to the city of Knoxville and the State of Tennessee, but by no stretch of imagination can it be brought into the class of an exposition like, for instance, the Chicago Exposition, the St. Louis Exposition, the San Francisco Exposition, or even the Jamestown Exposition, or the New Orleans Exposition of 1885. Therefore, to ask that because its request comes at the time that San Francisco's request comes, it must be treated on all fours with the other, is to ask what, to my mind, is totally illogical. If I am mistaken, I shall be glad to be corrected, but my memory is that the Knoxville Exposition has already been held twice and that this is the third time they are to hold it. Now, that is distinctly to the credit of that city and to that State, and I know of no State toward which I feel more close than I do to the State of Tennessee, coming as I do from a neighboring Commonwealth. But I can not bring myself to the belief—and if I am wrong I want this House to control my action—that it stands on anything like the same plane as to the other expositions.

I agree with every word that was said by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] touching the promise that was made by the city of San Francisco at the time it won its fight over New Orleans. I believe that city has done itself a very great injury, either in having made the promise in the first instance or having broken it in the second instance. But the question that is now before this House is what your conferees shall do in the situation that confronts them. We had this exposition bill in here with a great many obnoxious features connected with it, aside from the matter of amount. It had connected with it a commission that, to my mind, was indefensible from any standpoint under the sun. Unless I am instructed otherwise, I shall never agree to any such commission as was contemplated in the bill that was brought in here on this floor and debated from time to time.

But the House of Representatives is only half of the lawmaking body. The Senate have proposed as an amendment an appropriation of $1,500,000. I shall be glad to have this House indicate two things: First, whether it believes that the Government, irrespective of what has happened in the past, for the sake of its own dignity, should provide an exhibit; and, second, if it believes in such an exhibit, the extent of it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not believe that it is fair to say that foreign nations will judge this exposition by the size of the appropriation that is made in connection with the Government exhibit. I will tell you why. The exposition at San Francisco is not only the exposition of a United States, but it is an exhibition of the United States. And there are forty-odd contributors, Government contributors, to that exposition. Every State that contributes is making a Government exhibit, and it is not to be determined by the size of the appropriation of Congress as to the interest that the country is taking in the exposition. I have never believed that the policy that has been pursued in regard to expositions in the past has been a wise one, though I am ashamed to confess that I was overpersuaded in one instance and voted for a large appropriation. Nearly every man who has made such a vote because of that mistake has had it urged as a reason for making another. I want this House now, in some way, to instruct me, as its servant, on this conference what its judgment is touching the matter.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what is pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. To disagree to the rest of the Senate amendments and agree to a further conference.

Mr. CANNON. That is the motion, is it?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wanted to ask the gentleman, in speaking about things as a southern man, if New Orleans, being a southern city, did not influence to some extent the gentleman's vote as against San Francisco?

Mr. SHERLEY. It did not; and, in point of fact, I was not here and did not vote.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, I voted for New Orleans largely because it was in the South.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, that is the gentleman's right; that was his privilege.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say to the gentleman that, speaking of the various celebrations that are to be held in the next few years, I do not want him to forget that there will be one held in Baltimore City, 40 miles from here, commemorating the Battle of North Point, the bombardment of Fort McHenry, and the birth of the Star Spangled Banner.

Mr. SHERLEY. I hope it will not cost any Government money.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is going to cost some money, and the gentleman should not forget it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield to me time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I was for the exposition to be held at San Francisco because I believed it to be the ideal locality for holding an exposition commemorating the building of the Panama Canal; and further, I voted for San Francisco as against New Orleans because I believed that the city of San Francisco and the State of California were better able financially to carry on a great exposition.

But, Mr. Speaker, I did not understand during that debate that under no circumstances would the Government be asked or desired to make an exhibit. On the contrary, I think every Member of the House realizes that when we have a great international exposition it is inevitable that the Government shall be called upon to make, and it is proper that the Government should make, an exhibit.

I recall during the debate a statement made, if I recollect rightly, by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], with regard to the possibility or the probability of a Government exhibit, that, of course, if before the time arrived, the Government saw fit to make an exhibit, that was a matter for Congress to pass upon.

I think it exceedingly fortunate that there is no possibility that we shall be called upon to make up any deficit; that all that we are to be asked to do is to make an exhibit. And surely this great Government can ill afford, in advertising to the world this great exposition, commemorating to the world this great engineering feat, to withhold a reasonable appropriation for an exhibit, when we are calling upon all the world to exhibit.

It is my opinion that if we had decided upon New Orleans instead of San Francisco, the same proper request would at the proper time have been made on behalf of New Orleans, namely, that we have a Government exhibit. I do not believe that the majority of the Members of the House, at the time these two cities were rivals, understood that we by our action precluded, or sought to preclude, or expected to preclude, the possibility, and certainly none of us questioned the propriety of the Government making a proper exhibit when the time for making such an exhibit came.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I claim the same right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois seemed to be up first.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I suggest to the Chair that I was the first to take issue with this appropriation. At all events, I ask unanimous consent that both instructions be read.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman had been the first, but I am afraid he was not. I have no objection to the gentleman offering a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have my motion reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent that both of these motions be pending.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; that they shall be read.

Mr. MANN. I ask that my motion be reported. That is what I desire.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair is going to have done. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and then will read the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the House the managers on the part of the House should agree in conference to a proposition involving a Government exhibit at the exposition at San Francisco: Provided, That the amount of the appropriation carried in Senate amendment No. 129 shall not exceed $1,000,000, as agreed to in conference.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I offer mine as an amendment to those instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] offers an amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask to be recognized. I am entitled to the floor in this matter.

The SPEAKER. Unquestionably the gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I supposed that if the gentleman was recognized for an amendment, I would lose the floor.

The SPEAKER. How would the gentleman lose it?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can take the floor right away.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If a gentleman is recognized to offer an amendment, he gets the floor.

Mr. MANN. I think not necessarily.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think he is. I am willing to agree by unanimous consent that the gentleman may propose an amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York shall not lose the floor. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may offer this as an amendment, and he retain the floor. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the House that if the managers on the part of the House agree to an item for the Panama Pacific Exposition, they shall not agree to an appropriation therefor in excess of $750,000, and shall insist that this amount shall be made reimbursable under proper guaranties by the exposition company.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman wish to discuss——

Mr. CANNON. I should like to be recognized. I am a member of this committee. The gentleman's time is about up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My time is not up on this motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to make any motion?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand I am entitled to be recognized for debate.

The SPEAKER. Of course the gentleman is, if he wants to debate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to offer a substitute for the amendment just offered?

The SPEAKER. Except by unanimous consent, the Chair thinks not.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent to offer a substitute striking out $750,000 and inserting $500,000, and I ask that the House be allowed to vote on all these propositions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I hope that will be granted, so that the House may express its opinion as to the amount.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment to the amendment, to strike out $750,000 and insert $500,000.

Mr. MANN. Is not that a matter of right, instead of a matter of unanimous consent?

Mr. SHERLEY. He has not the floor. If he had the floor he would have the right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent, and the Chair would rather put it that way than rule on the other. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to know if I can offer an amendment including the Knoxville Conservation Exposition?

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; that can not be put into this.

Mr. AUSTIN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman had the floor he would have the right.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but he has not the floor. Three propositions are pending; not to exceed $1,000,000, not to exceed $750,000, and not to exceed $500,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as amended by the gentleman from South Carolina a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

The SPEAKER. It is not a substitute. The gentleman from Illinois offers a motion which he is privileged to offer. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment to that, and then the gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment to that.

Mr. FOSTER. It occurs to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts are somewhat conflicting. That is the reason I asked about the parliamentary status.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, if the gentleman wants a technical construction——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether it was the understanding that we are asked to vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. If the Speaker will permit, the resolution of instructions which I offered consists of two parts—one the declaration in favor of the Government exhibit at San Francisco and the other a proviso that the amount appropriated shall not exceed $1,000,000. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts in offering his amendment intended to offer it in lieu of the proviso.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; to the whole instruction.

Mr. MANN. May I ask further if the gentleman from South Carolina in offering his amendment offers it as an amendment to my resolution, which does not provide the reimbursement, or to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which does provide for reimbursement by the exposition company.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent of the House to have these propositions voted on in this way, and then we will understand it: First, whether the House desires to agree to a proposition that the Government shall make an exhibit; second, whether the amount shall be $1,000,000, $750,000, or $500,000. Let the questions come in that way and then we can determine it.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the Members will get a chance to vote whether we shall give them anything or not.

The SPEAKER. That is a proposition, No. 1. In a technical sense, the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts is a substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, and the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina is an amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I again ask, as a simple matter, to arrive at a plain purpose, that the motion first be put as to whether the conferees shall agree to the Government making an exhibit at all. If that be voted affirmatively, the question shall then come whether it shall be for $1,000,000. If that is not agreed to, then the question shall be whether it shall not exceed $750,000; and if that be not agreed to, then the question shall come on whether it shall be $500,000.

The SPEAKER. That is a simplification of the whole matter.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to know where we are going to get in. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the first part of the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I again ask, Mr. Speaker, to have it reported.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is not my amendment as a substitute to be first voted on?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the gentleman from Kentucky asked unanimous consent——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I know, but the Chair did not put the question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina to the substitute of the gentleman from Massachusetts, which means an appropriation of $500,000.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from New York desire a vote? I will ask to be recognized if the gentleman from New York does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have only been waiting to find out where I am.

Mr. CANNON. The Chair was about to put the question.

The SPEAKER. No one seemed disposed to take the floor.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question again. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have my proposition again reported.

The resolution of Mr. MANN was again read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow at noon this Congress will cease to exist. The deficiency bill is not yet agreed to; the District bill, I am told, awaits consideration on a conference report, and there are other bills. The committee of conference on this bill adjourned this morning at about 4 o'clock after an all-night session. If we are to have action at all on this bill we can not have any very lengthy discussion. In my five minutes I want to say that I am not interested in what the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] said, nor in what my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says about what the gentleman from California said, or what the gentleman from Massachusetts says showing that the gentleman from California is not consistent. The gentleman from California might die and all of us might cross over, and still the city of San Francisco would stand, still the fact would remain that they have raised $20,000,000, and still the fact would remain that the nations of the world had been invited to come, and some of the principal commercial nations have said that they will not come unless the United States makes an exhibit and takes a part in this exposition. People make big promises. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] did. Gentlemen generally, when a contest pends touching an exposition, do. Gentlemen made it years ago when New Orleans had that exposition which cost the Treasury largely over $3,000,000 in the end. Buffalo, ditto. We ought to be careful when we enter upon expositions, but having put our hand to the plow and being committed in the face of the world, and having sent out invitations to the world, it ceases to be a squabble between Representatives as to the location and authorization of expositions. I want to congratulate some of the gentlemen on the other side with whom I have talked who favored New Orleans, who stand ready to protect the national honor, and it becomes a question of national honor, and not a mere question of the reputation for consistency of some Representative. I believe that this appropriation ought to be made for a million dollars. The Senate amendment is for $1,500,000, and as a conferee, if I should be appointed, I shall voice the judgment of the House, but I want it to be an intelligent, well-thought-out judgment.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, during this contest between the city of New Orleans and the city of San Francisco, not only in the hearings before the Exposition Committee, but on the floor of the House, the plighted honor of the State of California was given to this House that it would not ask the House for one cent for a Government exhibit. In consideration of that contract which they entered into with this House they secured enough votes to have this exposition sent to San Francisco. I know personally of a number of gentlemen who are opposed to expositions who voted for San Francisco upon the promise that it would not cost the Government one penny. I am perfectly willing for these people—and they have that right now—to extend invitations to the nations of the world, and I am willing that the War Department, the Agricultural Department, the Smithsonian Institution, and all of the other departments of the Government shall lend these people all that the Government of the United States has to exhibit, but I am unwilling that this Congress should break its contract with San Francisco; I am unwilling that the people of San Francisco shall betray that plighted troth of their Representatives upon this floor that they would never ask for one penny. When the controversy was up before that committee Gov. Saunders, of the State of Louisiana, stated that they would ask Congress to appropriate $1,000,000, and in answer to that those gentlemen representing the State of California, among them Gov. Bell and the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], stated that the State of California would not ask for a cent. Then the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] came before the House and in the discussion at that time stated that California had pledged her faith that she would not ask for one penny, and that California kept her faith, that she did not make promises without keeping them. I am willing that the Government of the United States shall lend such aid as it pleases in giving to these people exactly what they ask for at the time they enter into a contract, but I am unwilling that this House shall repudiate its end of the contract, and I am unwilling that California should be permitted to repudiate her end of the contract by coming to the House now and asking for a cent. When these gentlemen were anxious to get the vote they were willing to pledge the Congress that there would not be a penny taken out of the Treasury. It is not good faith; it is in the worst of faith for those good people to come here now and ask for a cent, because the people of New Orleans stated to the House that if the exhibit was given to them they would want Congress to appropriate a sum of money to make an exhibit. They were fair in making that proposition, and the Representatives of the State of Louisiana stated that they wanted a million dollars. In answer to that California told us she did not want a penny.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, every Member on this floor is presumed to be the direct representative of about 200,000 people. It seems to me that if there is any place on earth where men ought to be expected to make good on their statements, it is among the Members on this floor. San Francisco or the State of California can not speak to the people of this country except through her Representatives here. They did speak when they wanted San Francisco selected as the place for holding this exposition, and they told us and the country at that time that if they were given this exposition not one penny would be requested for a Government exhibit. But now they forget this promise and come back and want us to appropriate $1,000,000 to make this exhibit. Buffalo, N. Y., is now trying to work the same kind of a game. Seattle worked the same game a few years ago and got away with it. I think this conduct indefensible. I shall vote for no Government exhibit for the simple reason that this exposition was located at San Francisco with the distinct and positive understanding that not one penny would be asked for this exhibit. If we were to do otherwise, if we are to ignore these assurances made by the accredited agents and Representatives of the localities in which these expositions are held, then all confidence in the future will be destroyed in gentlemen's word, and the public will justly loose confidence in the entire membership of this House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The first vote is on the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois down to the proviso; that is, whether the conferees shall be instructed to vote in favor of any appropriation.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 62, noes 52.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

The SPEAKER. Tellers are demanded. Those in favor of taking this vote by tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Thirty-six gentlemen have risen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point of order there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum here, and the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 90, answered "present" 5, not voting 167, as follows:

For the session:
Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. ANDRUS.
Mr. HOBSON with Mr. FAIRCHILD.
Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. CURRY.
Mr. PALMER with Mr. HILL.

Mr. MCCREARY. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no," and I find I am paired. I desire to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. Call the gentleman's name.

The name of Mr. MCCREARY was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to ask unanimous consent of the House to be allowed to instruct the conferees on amendment No. 130.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object. We have matters here not disposed of and that are pending.

Mr. AUSTIN. To what matters has the gentleman reference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. These other matters here.

The SPEAKER. The first vote to be taken is on the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the amount shall not exceed $1,000,000.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 59.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. MANN took their places as tellers.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois for an appropriation not to exceed $1,000,000.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 79.

So the resolution was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] of $750,000.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. As stated by the Chair, is the question on the $750,000 alone or $750,000 to be reimbursed to the Government?

The SPEAKER. The proposition made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] was a straight proposition to vote on the three different sums. That is all the Chair has to do with it. The question is limiting the appropriation so as not to exceed $750,000.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 67.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 105, answered "present" 5, not voting 174, as follows:

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. SLEMP.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The $750,000 proposition is lost. The question is on the $500,000 proposition, offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON].

The proposition was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. SHERLEY, and Mr. CANNON.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution in reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks unanimous consent to offer a resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conferees on the part of the House be instructed to yield on Senate amendment No. 130: Provided, That not exceeding the sum of $200,000 is appropriated.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects. The objection is sustained.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 26680. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 28283. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, and further insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives; had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. CULBERSON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8348) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Minor Meriwether, jr.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 28613. An act to construe the name of E. T. Bourger as the same appears in the report of Hawkins-Taylor commission in relation to Company F, Osage County Battalion, Missouri Home Guards, to refer to Joseph Bourgeret, of Osage County, Mo.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 28499) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the accompanying statement be read in lieu of the conference report. (H. Rept. 1621.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] calls up the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the accompanying statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman whether the provisions agreed to, especially in reference to the public utilities commission and the excise board, are set out in the statement?

Mr. BURLESON. They are not set out in the statement.

Mr. MANN. How long would it take to have them read, if the report should be read?

Mr. BURLESON. I believe it would take between two and three hours, if not longer.

Mr. MANN. Assuming—which, I think, is a violent assumption—that some Members of the House may be familiar with the long and, I was going to say, long-winded amendment of the Senate as to the public utilities commission, I shall not insist upon reading the report, although I think it is extremely bad form to pass such long measures without having them read in the House.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman that it is printed this morning in the RECORD in detail.

Mr. MANN. Yes; and I will venture to say that there is not a Member who has read it or who has had the time to read it. It is in fine print. Whoever may have looked at it has skipped it, but has not read it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement.

The Clerk read the statement at length.

[For text of the conference report, see Senate proceedings of March 2, 1913.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BURLESON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDING BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to take from the Speaker's table the public buildings bill (H. R. 28766), and that the House further insist on its disagreement to all the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Is there not a conference report?

Mr. BURNETT. There was a partial report, and there were only four items which were in disagreement between the conferees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Did not the Senate reject the conference report?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; it did.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Senate has disagreed to the conference report, there is no conference report, and all the amendments are in disagreement.

The SPEAKER. If the Senate has rejected the conference report, it is as dead as the men who lived before the flood.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then the motion is to further insist.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments to the public building bill, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BURNETT, Mr. CLARK of Florida, and Mr. ANDRUS.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report.

The SPEAKER. The clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1626).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

J. T. JOHNSON,
A. S. BURLESON,
F. H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

F. E. WARREN,
GEO. PEABODY WETMORE,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the legislative bill passed the House the first week of the session. The committee submitted a partial report, which was agreed to. Subsequently there was a complete agreement between the conferees of the two Houses, but the conference report was rejected by the Senate.

The reason for the Senate's rejection of the conference report was because in providing for the assay offices no provision was made for the mint at Carson, Nev., after July 1, 1913. Provision was made to continue other assay offices until December 31, 1913. The only matter presented to the Senate was the discrimination against Carson, Nev., and then a general statement of the utility of the assay offices to the mining country.

Thereupon the conferees assembled again, and the House conferees were told that unless they agreed to provide for all the assay offices until July 1, 1914, the Senate would not talk conference or agree to a report.

I want the House to understand the situation. These assay offices perform no governmental function. More than once the President has recommended that they be abolished. The Secretary of the Treasury has urged the Committee on Appropriations to abolish them, or to refrain from appropriating for them. There may have been a time when these assay offices were important. When it took the people in the mining country weeks and perhaps months to communicate with the great commercial centers, these assay offices were established in various sections throughout the West. They can now easily get their bullion to the market, and the only purpose the assay offices now serve is to furnish a local market, so that the people who produce bullion can sell it at the assay offices, and the bullion is transported to the commercial centers at the expense of the Government and not at the expense of the man who owns it.

In addition to that there is a small amount of patronage involved in keeping up these offices. I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the last fiscal year. The assay office at Carson City, Nev., earned $3,717.93; the expense of operating it was $15,284.67.

The assay office at Boise earned $3,617.46 and the cost of operating it was $14,541.14.

The assay office at Helena earned $4,000 and was operated at an expense of $18,358.

The assay office at Charlotte, N. C., earned $854 and was operated at an expense of $2,986.

The assay office at Deadwood earned $10,900 and was operated at an expense of $14,000.

The assay office at Seattle earned $10,000 and was operated at an expense of $44,000, in round numbers.

The assay office at Salt Lake City earned $2,249 and cost $14,793.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What was the aggregate loss?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The aggregate earnings were $42,180 and the aggregate expenditures were $144,673.

In addition to that, the expense of transporting the gold from the Treasury to the assay offices to pay for the gold bullion was borne out of another appropriation, and does not appear in the figures which I have read. Furthermore, the expense of transporting the bullion from the assay office to the mint is borne out of another appropriation, which does not appear in the figures I have given.

In addition to that we must appropriate in the sundry civil bill for the upkeep and maintenance of buildings in which these operations are carried on. According to the message of the President on the budget which was read in the House last week, the cost of operating these useless assay offices is a fraction over $300,000 a year.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is the chairman of the committee sure he is entirely correct that the item of express from the assay offices to the mint is not in the statement which he has read? My information is that it is. While it is not in this bill, in making up the statement of the cost of the assay offices, that expense is included. I know it is in the Deadwood item, but I am not so sure of the others.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Wyoming, I will say that the appropriation for transportation of bullion is in this bill, but is not included in these tables. At any rate, my information from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is that this table does not include that item, because I asked him the question, and I asked him to furnish me the figures, which he neglected later to do.

Mr. MONDELL. I know the gentleman from South Carolina wants to be accurate, but I made inquiries in regard to the Deadwood item, and my information is—I may be mistaken—that in the case of the Deadwood office the item of express is in the statement the gentleman has read.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would say that so far as the Deadwood assay office is concerned, if the other assay offices made a showing that would even compare with Deadwood, I would not feel that it was necessary to defeat this bill rather than to provide for them. Deadwood earned $10,917, while the expenses were $14,000.

Mr. MONDELL. My recollection is that in the case of the Deadwood office the item of express is almost exactly $4,000, so if that were taken out it would leave the Deadwood office just about paying its expenses.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; if the gentleman is correct about the transportation of bullion. I would not advocate abolishing the assay offices even though they might cost $300,000 and earn only $100,000 if they were necessary in the administration of governmental affairs. But I stand here to say that they perform no governmental function. They are a convenience to people who are engaged in mining. They serve to cause the Government to pay the express instead of the owner paying it. You might as well ask that the Government should establish markets in all parts of the country to buy the farmer's wheat or cotton, or whatever he produces, and pay the charges on it to the great centers where it must be used. Now it has been stated elsewhere that we were undertaking to deal a severe blow to the mining industry; that you might as well discontinue the experimental stations established in the interest of agriculture. The illustration is not apt. The experiment stations are established in order to encourage farmers to do intensive and progressive farming. There is nothing in an assay office that encourages anybody in the mining business, that teaches anybody how to mine, but the assay office is simply a market, and nothing more and nothing less. If you say you want the stamp of the Government as to the worth or fineness of your metal, I call attention to the fact that every mint is an assay office. They can send their bullion to the mint, and there it will be tested and paid for just like it is now, but the difference will be that there will not be any patronage to it, and the Government will not pay the charges between the mines and the mint.

Mr. Speaker, I would not be willing in ordinary circumstances, where a mere matter of a hundred thousand or two or three hundred thousand dollars is involved, to defeat or let die a great appropriation bill. If it would cause an extra session of Congress, I should hesitate long, but the extraordinary session has already been announced. Congress will meet the 1st of April. This bill does not provide for money to be expended until July 1 next. I think it is more important now, when the administration is being changed, that we should abolish these worthless institutions than it is that we should hasten this bill. The Republican Party is going out. I want these offices destroyed before my party gets in. In other words, so far as I am concerned, I think that this patronage ought to be abolished.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman takes his seat, do I understand that the gentleman moves to further insist on a disagreement?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; that will be my motion.

Mr. MANN. Of course, any gentleman may move to concur in any of these amendments and thus bring the matter before the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want the instructions of the House.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know whether any of the gentlemen who are interested in the amendments propose to concur, so as to bring those amendments directly before the House on a motion to concur?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not think I would have any power to keep gentlemen from making that motion.

Mr. MANN. I ask the gentleman if he knows of any such motion about to be made? If some one intends to make any such motion it might be best to make it before the discussion ends.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I know of nobody who is going to make the motion.

Mr. MANN. I say this for the purpose of directing the attention of those gentlemen who favor the amendment to the opportunity they have now to present their case before the House. Personally I am in favor of sustaining the position of the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, excepting the intimation of the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not care for any time. I simply would like to have a separate vote on the Deadwood item.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, 12 or 15 years ago, when I was a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, that committee thoroughly investigated this question. My recollection is that it was very nearly unanimous, if not unanimous, in favor of a change of policy. A year or two ago the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, if I recollect right, investigated that question, and that committee, Republicans and Democrats, were unanimously in favor of the abolition of these offices. So, three committees, after investigating that subject, say that these offices ought to be all abolished, Deadwood and the rest; that they serve no useful purpose to this Government, and I congratulate the Democratic Party on the courage that they show now in coming forward and moving for the abolition of these positions. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, if you do not do it now you never will do it. When you get these places filled you will be in the same position that the Republican Party has been in for the last 18 years or more. This reform must come now, as many of these reforms in governmental management must come, at the end of an administration, and when there is going to be a political change. I congratulate the chairman of this committee on the courage that he has shown, and I hope that every Member on this side of the House who looks for good and efficient management of the affairs of this Government will vote to concur with him in the request that he has made that they be abolished. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I can add anything to the clear, distinct, open, and manly statement made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], but I can not remain in my seat without raising my voice to uphold him in the great struggle he has made last year and this year to get rid of these absolutely useless barnacles, these parasites that are upon the body politic of this country. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] well stated, a year ago last July the committee of which I am chairman and of which he is a member thoroughly went into this question and I believe I voice practically the sentiment of every Member on that committee that it was absolutely unanimous for the abolition of these useless luxuries run and operated at public expense for private enterprise.

Mr. LOBECK. Did not the Director of the Mint recommend it also?

Mr. COX. The Director of the Mint recommended it, the Secretary of the Treasury recommended it, and preceding Secretaries of the Treasury recommended it, and recently the President of the United States recommended it. Now, that we are confronted with the question of standing for that for which we have stood on the floor of this House for many years, to wit, economy, here is the time to show the stuff of which we are made. Rather than see the gentleman fail in the campaign that he has made on this question I would see this bill fail. Talk about your class legislation, it is bottomed upon class legislation from start to finish. No sound reason can be offered, no sensible logic can be advanced by any man, why the Government of the United States shall come to the rescue of the great mine owners of this country and take away a commodity at the assay office, bear the cost of transportation from the assay offices to the mints of the United States, when, as well said, every mint is an assay office. I was of the opinion at one time that possibly the assay office in New York City should be maintained, but I have complete about-faced on that proposition. It is a useless cost upon the people of the country and, my Democratic friends, as Mr. HILL, of Connecticut, has well told us, if we ever are to get rid of this useless expenditure of the people's money now is our time and here is our opportunity. When Members upon the other side of the House stand almost as a unit upon this proposition I appeal to the Democrats upon this side of the House to stand under and beneath the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill and let the bill fail rather than be compelled to yield to the reestablishment of these things. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have preceded me have clearly pointed out the issue in this case. There is no question whatever that these assay offices are of no benefit to the Government. They are of no benefit to the people at large. The only purpose of maintaining them is to pay a subsidy to private persons for the shipment of their commodities to the mint. There is no reason now why they should continue to be established. They cost the Government several hundred thousand dollars. The chairman of the committee is clearly right in his efforts to strike them out of the bill, and, in my opinion, this House should show by its vote here now that they intend to uphold the House conferees upon this question. [Applause.] [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield a half minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the seamen's bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair desires to state there is no motion before the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have a division on the disagreement.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 120, noes 5.

So the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BURLESON, and Mr. GILLETT.

MINORITY VIEWS ON CANCELLATION MACHINES AND LEWIS PUBLISHING CO.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, the minority members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department ask unanimous consent to file the minority views to the majority report on cancellation machines (H. Rept. 1600, pt. 2) and also on the Lewis Publishing Co. (H. Rept. 1601, pt. 2).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the committee to file the minority views on cancellation machines and also on the Lewis Publishing Co. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MONETARY LEGISLATION.

Mr. PICKETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, for the purpose of inserting a letter written by ex-Gov. Horace Boies, of Iowa, to the Committee on Banking and Currency relative to monetary legislation. Under the rules of the committee it can not be printed as a part of the hearings.

While we belong to opposite political parties, any expression of views from this distinguished citizen is worthy of careful consideraton.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

HEMET, CAL., February 1, 1911.

To the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY,
Washington, D. C.:

I am no financial expert. What I know about monetary affairs is an open book which anyone may read if he so desires. I do know that the Constitution of the United States, which is the supreme law of the Nation, confers upon Congress the power to coin money, and I know that the power so conferred necessarily excludes the same power from any other source in this Government.

I know also that it is now settled by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, the court of last resort in this Nation, that Congress may coin this money out of paper, i. e., that it may provide for the issue of Government notes which shall be legal tender, precisely as gold coin is legal tender, in payment of all debts, public or private. Again, I know that no man in this Nation could pay a debt of $10 with all the national-bank notes that were ever issued if his creditor refused to receive them in payment of his claim.

Knowing these facts it has long been a source of wonder to me that in all the discussions of our financial system in Congress and out of it no man of late, so far as I know, has suggested a plan for the issue of Government notes which would be money if issued, to take the place of our national-bank notes, which are not money and can not be made money.

The first source of my surprise is to know how it is that under present conditions in the Nation Congress can feel that it is not a duty of its own to furnish such a currency if it has the ability as well as the power to do so. No man could be found who would deny the obligation to Congress to coin gold and silver sufficient to meet the daily wants of our people. Why, then, let me ask, is it not just as much an imperative duty of that body to coin paper sufficient for their use if the Nation is now in shape to furnish the necessary reserve for a sound currency of that kind? If there is a satisfactory answer to that question, I have never heard it and can not conceive it.

Another source of surprise to me is why Congress should allow private corporations to reap the enormous profit that results from the issue of a paper currency redeemable with gold, instead of providing for the issue of that paper by the Government, redeemable in the same way, and save for the masses of our people the profit that now goes into the pockets of stockholders of our national banks. I am not here to complain about our national banking system. At the time it was adopted, under the circumstances then and for a long time thereafter existing, it was a wise measure for which the people of this Nation should ever be grateful to its authors, as it furnished a market for our Government bonds when there was no other, at home or abroad, and bridged a chasm in the finances of the Nation that could then be crossed in no other way, and best of all, it enabled the Government, bankrupt as it then was from the enormous debt of our Civil War, to regain a sound financial standing among the nations of the earth.

But its mission has been performed; its work is already done, and to continue it longer is not only unnecessary, but it is also unjust to the masses of our people, for the naked truth is that this Government, in the form of its own credit, furnishes the capital upon which national banks transact their business and allows these private corporations to reap the enormous profit therefrom, instead of saving the same, as far as can now be done, for all of our people.

To fairly comprehend this point, one must stop long enough to scrutinize the main provisions of our national-banking act.

The first important step in the organization of a national bank is the purchase of Government bonds equal to the amount of bank notes it is to be authorized to issue. These bonds are interest-bearing securities upon which the bank, precisely as an individual, collects the interest as it falls due—a low rate of interest, it is true, but still a very large sum in the aggregate to be paid to all of our national banks—and this sum, it must be remembered, is collected in one way or another from the masses of our people.

Then it must be remembered, also, that the money paid for these bonds is the last dollar the bank ever parts with the title to to enable it to issue its own notes and put them in circulation as money, and in the place of its money it holds the title to the bonds it has purchased, precisely as an individual would do.

The next step of the bank is to deposit these bonds with the Government as security for the redemption of its notes when demanded, and in addition to this it is required to keep on deposit in lawful money $1 for every $4 of its own notes it is allowed to issue and put in circulation as money, but this deposit remains its own property just as much after the deposit as before and can not be used for any purpose except to redeem its own notes if demanded.

So, as I have said before, it is easy to see that the bank has not parted with one dollar in money that it has not got a full equivalent for in an interest-bearing security of the Government, and for every dollar of its own money deposited it is authorized to issue and put in circulation $4 of its own notes, upon which it is authorized to collect the rate of interest allowed by the State where the bank is located.

The result is it collects interest on what practically is a loan of money to the Government and then on four times as much of its own notes as it is required to keep on hand for their redemption, or, truthfully speaking, it collects this latter interest not on what it owns, but on what it owes, for the bank note is simply evidence of a debt of the bank, payable on demand, as anyone can see who will take the pains to read one of these notes.

Now, let me ask, what is it that forms the capital upon which the national bank acquires the right to issue and circulate its notes as money? Is it anything more or less than the credit of this Nation, which it acquires through the purchase of the Government bonds and deposits as security for the redemption of its notes? And if a national bank can use $4 of its notes secured by the credit of the Nation for every $1 of reserve it deposits, is there any reason why the Government can not do the same thing for the benefit of all of our people, so that all may share equally in the profit derived from that source?

How can this be done?

Here again I must repeat I am not a financial expert. I am well aware that of my own initiative I could not suggest even the outlines of a plan for such a currency, but here again our own national banking system would, if necessary, furnish an infallible guide, but this is unnecessary, for to a limited extent we have the system already in operation and know how well it served us in the dark days of the Civil War when there was not one dollar of gold within the reach of the Government that could be put behind its paper currency to provide for its redemption.

All that is now necessary is for Congress to extend our system of Treasury notes, safely guarded, until they are sufficient in volume to supply our people with all the paper currency required for the transaction of the business of the Nation.

That part of it is easy enough; simply issue these notes as fast as the Government can supply an adequate reserve of gold—or, I would say, gold and silver bullion—in the Treasury to make it certain that these notes would be redeemed with gold bullion, or the equivalent of gold bullion with silver bullion, at the world's market price whenever demanded.

If one dollar of lawful money and the credit of the Nation is sufficient to guarantee the redemption of four dollars of national bank notes on demand, one dollar's worth of gold bullion or the same worth of silver bullion in the Treasury of the Nation would be sufficient to guarantee the redemption of four dollars of its own Treasury notes.

Our present ability to supply the needed reserve is unquestioned. The Government could buy the gold bullion or the silver bullion, one or both, needed for that purpose from our own citizens, the products of our own mines, with these same notes any day it was required.

The only question there is about the whole transaction is the one that would arise when we try to find a basis fair to the banks and fair to the Government alike by which the Treasury notes could be substituted for national bank notes and the latter be wholly withdrawn from circulation and destroyed.

I can only suggest what seems to me a fair arrangement in that respect, well knowing if I am wrong in any particular any Congress of this Nation will be abundantly able to find a fair way to make the exchange.

Left to me I would say, let Congress provide for the issue of Treasury notes just as fast as a national reserve in gold bullion, or its full equivalent in silver bullion, equal to one dollar in gold for every four dollars of Treasury notes issued could, without disturbance of other business affairs, be accumulated in the Treasury, and direct that as fast as these notes are issued they shall be exchanged for national bank notes with anyone desiring to make the exchange, and also make it mandatory on national banks to make such exchange on demand from Government agents as quickly as can reasonably be done.

When a per capita amount of these Treasury notes sufficient for the wants of the people—this to be fixed by Congress—has been issued and put in circulation forbid further use of bank notes as a medium of exchange.

It is here, as I have suggested above, that the only question of difficulty arises.

It is evident that by the exchange proposed the Government would pay a debt of the banks, and a very large debt at that, as every note they issue is simply the evidence of a debt they owe. That such a payment should not be made without some compensation from the banks is apparent, but what that should be is a question about which fair men may well differ.

The banks now have on deposit $1 in lawful money for every $4 of their own notes outstanding. That deposit should, without question, be turned over to the Government, which would redeem their notes by the exchange. Again, the banks have purchased bonds of the Government, bearing a low rate of interest, to be used as security for the redemption of their notes. In every case where a bank has been organized long enough so that the profits of its business from the issue of its notes ought to be a fair compensation for its purchase of low interest bearing bonds I think the bank ought to be required to keep these bonds until they mature, and in cases, if any, where banks have not been doing business long enough to reap a profit from the issue of their notes sufficient to compensate them for their investment in low interesting bearing bonds these banks should be authorized to exchange them for others bearing the same rates paid by the Government on its first-class bonds.

I would divide these holders into two classes. All banks doing business for a term of 10 years I would say should keep their bonds until they mature; all banks doing business less than 10 years I would have them authorized to exchange their bonds for higher interest bearing bonds.

With all of this done, it would still be true that the stockholders in our national banks would be among the most highly privileged classes of the American people, for they would be relieved of all question of liability for the redemption of notes issued by the bank, and they would retain as their own every dollar of the profit that had resulted from the transaction of the business of the bank from the day of its organization to that of the day of the exchange.

And, on the other hand, the Government would not be without some compensation for all it has bestowed on the banks in addition to the deposits it would receive from the banks, which would exactly equal its own in the Treasury for a reserve for the redemption of its own notes. It should not be forgotten that these bonds enabled the Nation to fund a debt of its own due on demand, which at that time it had no means of paying, and thereby enabled it to regain its standing as a solvent Government among the nations of the world—a compensation of inestimable value to all of our people.

Now it is reasonable to inquire what, if anything, the people of this Nation would gain by such exchange of their paper currency?

In the first place, we would have an absolutely stable paper dollar, always worth its exact face value in what is legal tender, never more, never less—something we can not say of our own coin or that of any other nation, for the value of all coin the instant it crosses the boundary line of the nation creating it becomes bullion only, and its value changes with the market price of the material of which it is made.

In the second place, the Treasury note would be legal tender in the hands of anyone possessing it, and as our population increases and the demand for more paper currency becomes imperative, as it will, the Government instead of private corporations would reap the advantage of the difference between the reserve maintained for the redemption of these notes and the face value of the notes issued, which under our banking system is $4 in their notes for every dollar of reserve maintained.

In the third place, paper currency redeemable with bullion would, so far as our own people are concerned, be practically irredeemable, for no one would withdraw it from the Treasury to hoard or use in the transaction of business, and it would always be on hand to meet any emergency of the Government in case of extreme need, and here it should be said that Congress should in every practicable way provide for the increase of the reserve in the Treasury to the highest limit obtainable without detriment to the business interests of the country, for gold in the treasury of any nation is the very sinew of war and a better protection against foreign aggression of any kind than forts on the land or dreadnoughts on the sea. We have the gold to outdo in this respect any other nation of the earth. Through a financial system of the Government we could preserve it better than in any other way.

There is still another advantage which could be made to accrue direct to the people of this Nation, greater and better than all the rest.

The power to coin money necessarily, I think, implies the power to regulate its use or, in other words, to determine the rate of interest for which it can be loaned if issued by the Government. A uniform rate of interest in all the States of the Union could be made of incalculable benefit to the poorest class of our people and would do more to place capital and labor on a plane of equality of privilege better than can ever be done by legislation in any other way.

So long as each State of the Union can fix its own rate of interest the effort of many to attract needed capital to themselves will compel unreasonable rates throughout the whole Nation. Individuals ought to be able to borrow money on good security just as cheaply as Governments can borrow it throughout the world, with the single exception of an additional charge of a sum sufficient to pay the lender the cost of placing it in small sums and indemnifying him against inevitable loss, which would never exceed 1 per cent above the rate paid by the Government on its bonds. Under such a system 5 per cent at the most would be the highest rate that could be charged anyone in these United States, and the outrageous wrong that is daily practiced upon the poorer classes under our present conditions would be ended once and forever.

It is simply fair to myself in closing this article to say I have been compelled to write it without a recent opportunity to examine our national banking act or any of the amendments thereto, and it is not improbable that I have failed in some respects to accurately state some of its provisions and have omitted others that should have been noticed in a discussion of this kind, but my most sanguine hope is that I have been able to bring to the attention of others one neglected phase of a question of paramount interest to the American people at the present time.

Respectfully submitted.

HORACE BOIES.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

The SPEAKER. Is there a statement?

Mr. LAMB. Yes, sir; there is a statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the statement read in lieu of the report or not?

Mr. LAMB. I want the statement read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman if this is a complete agreement?

Mr. LAMB. A complete agreement.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the statement will be read.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the omission of the reading of the tables.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the statement.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how we can tell anything about it by a table of comparisons which is not read. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the tables.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the tables.

Mr. LAMB. They are comparisons. That is all.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether the statement shows by numbers what disposition is made of the various Senate amendments?

Mr. LAMB. No; it does not; but I have that in the full report here.

Mr. MANN. But that does not do us any good.

Mr. LAMB. If you want to have the full report read, all right. I thought you wanted to get along with the work, and that was the reason I suggested it.

Mr. MANN. I wanted to know what amendments were agreed to or disagreed to.

Mr. LAMB. By listening to the statement you will find them right there and the reasons for it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks that the part of the statement containing these tables be omitted. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know how much there is in the statement covering these items in the bill?

The SPEAKER. That does not embrace the rest of the statement. Just take the tables out.

Mr. MANN. I did not know but the tables were all that there was to the statement.

Mr. LAMB. Not by a good deal.

Mr. MANN. All right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] to omit the tables?

There was no objection.

The statement was read.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1628).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. Amendment numbered 217: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 217, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the words "There shall be," so that it will read: "One director, who shall be a scientist and have charge of all scientific and technical work, $4,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 225: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 225, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$105,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 230: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 230, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$232,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 231: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 231, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$279,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 232: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 232, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted by said amendment insert "$17,376,945"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 234: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 234, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with the marketing and distributing of farm products, and for the employment of persons and means necessary in the city of Washington and elsewhere, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $50,000," and add the words "of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 236: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 236, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the comma following the end of the parenthesis insert the words "and any amendments thereto"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 238: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 238, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language used in said paragraph substitute the following:

"And hereafter every officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture whose rate of compensation is specified herein shall receive compensation at the rate so specified."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 241: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 241, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of $200,000 insert "$75,000," and strike out the words "to be available until the end of the fiscal year 1915"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 247: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 247, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language in said amendment insert the following:

"That the President of the United States shall appoint a commission composed of not more than seven persons, who shall serve without compensation, to cooperate with the American commission assembled under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress to investigate and study in European countries cooperative land-mortgage banks, cooperative rural-credit unions, and similar organizations and institutions devoting their attention to the promotion of agriculture and the betterment of rural conditions; and for the purpose of its investigations the commission shall be authorized to incur and have paid upon the certificate of its chairman such expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere for the payment of the salaries of employees, clerks, stenographers, assistants, and such other necessary expenses as the commission may deem necessary: Provided, That the total expenes incurred for all purposes shall not exceed the sum of $25,000, and the said commission shall submit a report to Congress as early as practicable embodying the results of its investigations and such recommendations as it may see fit to make."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 248: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 248, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum inserted insert "$17,986,945"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN LAMB,
A. F. LEVER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

HENRY E. BURNHAM,
F. E. WARREN,
T. P. GORE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I thought we would waive the reading of the statement on the assurance of the gentleman from Virginia that the balance of the statement would show something about what has been done with the Senate amendments. We have not had a word yet as to what disposition is made of the amendments.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. In the first place, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] asked to have the statement read in lieu of the report, and that was granted. Then he asked to have the tables left out of the statement in the reading, and that was done. Now, what further is to be done?

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is anything further. We have gotten beyond that. I suppose there is nothing to do except to ascertain from the gentleman himself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] has an hour.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman ought to tell the House what disposition is made, at least, of the various important Senate amendments. We have no knowledge before the House at all, except on a paper which has not been read to the House.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] has an hour. What does he propose to do with it?

Mr. LAMB. I am going to ask for a vote on this bill after explaining some of it.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. LAMB. Now, Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House for a few minutes, I will try to show the differences between the Senate and the House and will answer any question on any of these points that may be asked of me. The bill now carries $393,000 more than it carried when it passed the House. The Senate put on $1,000,000, in round numbers, and in conference the House conferees reduced that amount to $393,000. The items going to make up this amount are chiefly as follows:

One new Weather Bureau station carries $15,000. That is all the increase in that bureau.

In the Bureau of Animal Industry for the hog cholera serum demonstration, $35,000 is given. For the administration of the various serum and toxin legislation provided in the bill, the sum of $25,000 is allowed. That is all the increase in the Bureau of Animal Industry.

In the Bureau of Plant Industry additional sums are appropriated as follows: For investigations of the physiology of crop plants, $3,000; for the investigation of the climatization of cotton, corn, and so forth, $5,000; for the investigation of ginning, baling, and testing cotton, $20,000. An amendment was put on in the Senate, and we had a good deal of discussion over it. For dry-land crop production investigation, $5,000 is given. For the investigation of western irrigation agriculture, $2,000 is given, and for additional truck-crop work, $11,000. That is all in this bureau.

For the Forest Service $5,000 is given for additional field supplies and equipment and instruments; additional for wood testing, $20,000. The Senate conferees insisted on having more. I reminded them of the fact that out of reverence for the other side here we had already given ten or fifteen thousand dollars.

In the Bureau of Chemistry an increase of $5,000 was allowed for the collaboration work with the other departments of the Government, and $5,000 to restore the position and salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, stricken out on a point of order.

A large number of these amendments, gentlemen, that you will see mentioned in the report are due to the fact that points of order were made against them in the bill, and these amounts went out in the House and had to be restored in the Senate.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. LAMB. Yes; but I thought the gentleman had finished worrying me. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOWLER. I want 5 minutes or 10.

Mr. LAMB. I shall certainly give the gentleman five minutes if he will stop worrying everybody. [Laughter.]

In the Bureau of Entomology, $10,000 is given for the investigation of insects affecting field and forage crops. For the investigation of miscellaneous insects $4,500 is given. Then, the salary of the chief of the bureau, which was striken out by the learned gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER], is restored. It was restored in the Senate.

Under the Biological Survey, $5,000 is given for the purpose of establishing a winter-game range in Wyoming; $5,000 additional is allowed for the investigation of birds and mammals, and $10,000 is given for the enforcement of the provisions of the act to protect migratory game and insectivorous birds.

You know something about that, gentlemen, because you had a discussion on this floor a few days ago in regard to it, and your action on this floor gave this amendment to the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand that an appropriation was made in connection with that legislation?

Mr. LAMB. Ten thousand dollars is given. The gentleman from Wyoming heard that $10,000 matter discussed over here.

Mr. COX. I thought the gentleman said $5,000 more?

Mr. LAMB. No.

In the Office of Public Roads, $5,000 additional is given for investigating the best material for road making; $20,000 is provided to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make an exhibit at the meeting of the International Dry Land Congress in Oklahoma during the coming fiscal year; $75,000 is allowed for fire protection in the forested sheds of navigable streams, and $25,000 is provided for the payment of the expenses of a commission authorized by the act to investigate and study the cooperative land-mortgage banks of certain European countries.

Now, that was one of the amendments put on in the Senate which tied up your conferees for two nights and two days. It provides no pay for these people. They are to go over to Europe to find out the modus operandi of constructing and operating cooperative farmers' banks. I insisted, as I did before my committee, that I could go over to the Library and get this information in two days, but there was nothing that would satisfy the Senate save to have this commission go to Europe and find out how they will do this work.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it was necessary to satisfy the Senate?

Mr. LAMB. It was necessary in order to have a bill at all at this session of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not ever believe that. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, on this question of cooperative banks, in view of what the leader on the other side has said, I just want to say to this House that I do not believe there is a Member here who has been more opposed than I have been to what I have termed "roving commissions." When this matter first came before the Agricultural Committee I insisted that I could go over to the Library and secure this information. The reply was that you could not ascertain the workings of this farmers' cooperative bank as carried on in the various European countries, and that the most practical solution of this question that came up from nearly every State in this Union was to investigate this banking system. I insisted further that these bills belonged to the Committee on Banking and Currency and not to the Agricultural Committee; but they mustered forces from everywhere and insisted in their literature and all through the papers of the country that the Agricultural Committee was not willing to respond to the just demands of the farmers of this country, and I know they made points against me. Yet I was willing to stand out until the Senate, through their conferees, insisted that there was an emphatic and positive demand on the part of the people of this country for an investigation.

A lawyer came into my office a few days before this bill was made up and said to me, "I know they want this; and if you will do me the favor, will you please strike out the word 'cooperative'?"

I said, "My friend, I am no banker, but I know very well that when I strike out the word 'cooperative,' it will defeat the very object that these people have in view." I said to him, as I said to the members of that committee, that I believed we had the information here now, and therefore I was inclined not to pay these commissioners anything, but to appropriate this small amount to pay their expenses over to Europe, in order that they might learn the practical workings of this system of banking. I believed that we had the information. I know full well that commissions from Germany, England, and France have come to this country to investigate the moral, social, and even the religious conditions of this country, going all through it. By way of parenthesis let me say that they went back to their respective countries and reported that the chief reason in their judgment for the moral, intellectual, social, and religious progress of this country was the system of Sunday schools in this country. Every man who has read Detocqueville and other French writers knows that they have told them the story before. We know very well that John Bright, one of the ablest English statesmen, once said in the British Parliament that the progress of America along these lines was due to our wonderful Sunday schools in this country, shaping the morals and developing the character of people all through our happy land. But notwithstanding this, at the last moment, and in order to bring the bill in here at all, the House receded on this proposition.

The Senate at the same time receded on amendments 75, 76, and 77, which proposed to strike out the seed distribution. They held to that longer perhaps than any other proposition, and I do not know what would have been the result so far as I was concerned as one Member except that I happened to be on the floor of the Senate while they were discussing this question. While they were willing to leave out the congressional distribution, they still retained in the bill the $265,000 for the seeds themselves, saying that you must distribute them through the Agricultural Department.

Now, I happen to know something about the Agricultural Department. I have taken a whole month and gone through it and studied it from bottom to top, and I know that, in addition to the clerks you have there now, you would need a hundred more if these seeds were distributed through the Agricultural Department. Therefore your conferees came to the conclusion that it was best, so far as this was concerned, to get the Senate to recede on that proposition. They held it over us to compel us, as they thought, to agree with them on the various amendments of a legislative character put in the back of this bill. They had to recede on most of those propositions; and I want to say to you, gentlemen of this House, that you have got here one of the best bills that has been passed, I think, since I have been a Member of this Congress. It has taken patience, meekness, and courage to do what we did in this conference committee. If you will excuse the personal equation, Virginia furnished the patience, Iowa the meekness, and South Carolina the courage. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Was the amendment in reference to the manufacture of virus left in the bill by the conference report?

Mr. LAMB. They asked for $100,000.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the amount.

Mr. LAMB. The Senate inserted it and we receded on that, in view of what was stated by the Bureau of Animal Industry and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Amendment numbered 37 authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to sell specimens of scientific and educational value; was that left in?

Mr. LAMB. Yes; the House receded.

Mr. MANN. Amendment 73, for the study of rice culture, an appropriation of $10,000; was that left in?

Mr. LAMB. The Senate receded.

Mr. MANN. Senate amendment 131, appropriating for the Rocky Mountain tick?

Mr. LAMB. That went out; the Senate receded on that.

Mr. MANN. Amendment numbered 141, for a national game preserve in North Dakota?

Mr. LAMB. That went out; the Senate receded, but we had a big fight on it.

Mr. MANN. Does the migratory bird bill remain in just as it was?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What became of the Senate amendment in reference to a division of markets, Bureau of Statistics?

Mr. LAMB. The Senate receded and agreed to adopt our amendment providing for $50,000 to carry on that work. We did not establish the division.

Mr. MANN. What about the amendment for the painting of Secretary Wilson?

Mr. LAMB. That remains in.

Mr. MANN. And the amendment which changes the sending out of publications from the Printing Office to the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. LAMB. We had a warm contest over that, and sent for the Chief of the Division of Publications and the Public Printer, and after hearing their statements we concluded to let it remain in.

Mr. MANN. It remains over in the Printing Office?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What about this amendment for a national forest reservation commission directed to investigate the acquiring of land along the watershed of the Potomac River?

Mr. LAMB. That went out.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman what disposition was made of the Senate amendment looking to an amendment of the original Weeks Act?

Mr. LAMB. They asked for $200,000, and we contended that $50,000 was enough, and finally as a compromise we put it at $75,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have reference to the extension of the forest reserve.

Mr. LAMB. The House receded on that.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember what the gentleman said about the hog cholera.

Mr. LAMB. We increased the lump-sum appropriation for the Bureau of Animal Industry, and then provided that $75,000 be devoted to that purpose.

Mr. HAUGEN. The Senate increased the appropriation $34,000, and the House set aside $40,000 for hog cholera. The Senate set aside $100,000, and we compromised on $75,000.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LAMB. Yes.

Mr. COX. This commission to investigate the land mortgages and credits, and so on, I find it does not fix the number of the men who are to make up the commission.

Mr. HAUGEN. It states that they shall serve without compensation.

Mr. COX. I am reading from the amendment as reported by the Senate.

Mr. HAUGEN. The conferees did not report the Senate amendment, but reported it with an amendment.

Mr. COX. How are these people to get any pay?

Mr. HAUGEN. They serve without pay—only get their expenses.

Mr. COX. Are they required to pay their own way?

Mr. HAUGEN. No; they have $25,000 for expenses, but no salary.

Mr. COX. I want to make an inquiry about amendment 240, to appoint members to investigate something concerning the national agriculture——

Mr. MANN. It is to create a national institute of agriculture.

Mr. LAMB. That goes out.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives No. 1 to the bill (S. 8273) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls with the following amendment:

After line 3, page 1, of said amendment, insert:

"To the city of Berlin, in the State of Wisconsin, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

That the Senate had disagreed to amendments Nos. 2, 3, 7, 30, and 32, and had agreed to the balance of said amendments.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6877) to reinstate Robert N. Campbell as a first lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 27090. An act for the relief of Cora Evans.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing to let this occasion go by without expressing the sentiments which I have long entertained in regard to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Mr. LAMB. [Applause.] I think no one who has been a Member of the House ever has been held in more affectionate regard by other Members than has this distinguished gentleman; and while in this House we receive new Members, whoever they may succeed, on equal terms, yet it is with profound regret on the part of the membership of this House that we will be required hereafter to meet without the aid and genial presence of this man, one of the survivors of the Confederacy, a man beloved of us all. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, with almost tears in my eyes, and certainly gratitude in my heart, for what has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I now yield five minutes to his colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I have but the kindest feelings for every member of this great Agriculture Committee. I represent an agricultural district. I am an agriculturist myself, and I believe as much in the advancement of agriculture as any man on the floor of this House; but, Mr. Speaker, I claim that economic rules which should control in the administration of the Government should apply to the Agriculture appropriation bill as well as to every other appropriation bill before this Congress. I have been criticized by some members of this committee because I have seen fit to make points of order against unauthorized appropriations in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I find that the law provides for an Assistant Secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, with a fixed salary at $5,000 a year. The Revised Statutes fixes this salary. The committee reported the bill increasing it to $6,000. I made a point of order against the increase, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was forced to sustain the point of order. Some distinguished gentleman on the floor of this House at that time went into a frenzy because the salary was made to harmonize with the law of the land.

The salary of the Chief of the Weather Bureau is fixed by permanent law at $4,500. This bill increased it to $6,000 per annum. When we reached the consideration of that part of the bill I made a point of order against such increase, and the Chair was forced to sustain the point of order. I interposed like points of order against many such increases carried by this bill in violation of the statutes of my country, and the Chairman was compelled to sustain each of them.

Now, the distinguished chairman of this committee [Mr. LAMB], a gentleman for whom I entertain the kindliest feelings, a man whose services have been long and beneficial to his country, has said that many of the amendments made to the bill by the Senate were forced to be made because the salaries of men in this department were cut down by points of order made by me. I want to know by what rule the Senate is governed which compelled it to violate the law of the land? Every Member of Congress took upon his soul an oath at the beginning of this Congress to support the Constitution and laws of the United States. What rule or custom is more binding upon us than this oath?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not particularly finding fault with the amount that has been appropriated for some of these servants of this department, but I have insisted from the beginning that if the salaries as fixed by law are too low the proper thing to do is to revise the statutes, making increases according to the merits of the labor to be performed. I have persistently insisted that there is such a loose condition prevailing in both Houses of Congress in fixing the salaries of that great army of workers, not only in this department, but in every department of the Government, that it is absolutely necessary that some law fixing these salaries definitely should be passed.

I discover, Mr. Speaker, that many increases have been made in the salaries of men whose duties, I understand, are only nominal. I understand that there are other capable men on inadequate salaries, as, for instance, Mr. Rhodes, who is superintendent of the experiment garden at Arlington, whose salary is very low. He is a man of 18 or 20 years' service. He has charge of experiments with flowers, vegetables, and shrubbery, often producing new varieties so necessary to agriculture and horticulture. He is an expert, and yet that great mind, that industrious, useful servant of the people, has been compelled to labor on a salary of $60 a month during all this time because he is not a college graduate.

The greatest opportunity for political graft prevails in these departments. I am told by older Members and Members who have gone out of this House that all a prominent Member has to do is to go down to one of these departments and tell them that he has a friend whose salary he wants increased, and a recommendation for such an increase by the head of the department is made. The salary is carried in the next appropriation bill without further ado.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, my friend is mistaken in that statement.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I make no statement on the floor of the House that I can not prove if called upon to do so.

Mr. LAMB. Well, if the gentleman is infallible, he is an exception to the rule.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield; and I say to this House that in the construction of this bill more than 100 new positions were created by the Agricultural Committee of this House, and I discover in glancing over it many more new ones have been added by Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am in such hearty accord with the deserved eulogy pronounced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on the retiring chairman of this committee whom we all love as well as honor [applause] that I regret to inject a note of discord into the very general acceptance of this conference report, but this conference report affords a striking example of the iniquity of carrying general legislation on an appropriation bill. The bill contains legislation, places or attempts to place nearly every feathered creature which flies under Federal control to the exclusion of the authority of the people in the States. In my opinion this legislation more profoundly and fundamentally affects and alters the relationship of the Federal Government with the States of the Union and their citizens than any legislation in our history, and yet it is adopted and becomes a part of the law of the land, at least until repealed or set aside by the courts, without any real consideration in either body of Congress, without opportunity for consideration in this body.

I doubt if one-quarter of the Members of the House have read the legislation. I doubt if one Member in ten has given serious thought to what is proposed, and yet the fact is that in voting for this legislation Members are voting to take from the people who elected them all control over a subject matter affecting them intimately and of great importance. Members are preparing to arm a Federal bureau to bring within the scope of a Federal statute, carrying heavy penalties of fine and imprisonment, an infinite variety of relatively harmless acts which do not necessarily involve moral turpitude and the commission of which can inflict no serious loss or injury on anyone.

The legislation provides for the establishment, for the first time in our history, of Federal police in every part of the Union in numbers no man can now estimate. I can not believe that this astounding and revolutionary extension of Federal authority, this wanton and wicked invasion of the reserved power of the people, this Russianizing of the Republic, will be allowed to remain on the statute books. I pledge now my best efforts for its repeal, and I have abiding faith that many who now vote for this measure without realizing its scope and effect will join in a demand for its repeal if it is not set aside by the courts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 28699. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 24266. An act to authorize the sale of burnt timber on the public domain.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 8589. An act relating to supervision of the Lincoln Memorial;

S. 8000. An act providing for publicity in taking evidence under act of July 2, 1890;

S. 6877. An act to reinstate Robert N. Campbell as a first lieutenant in the Coast Artillery Corps, United States Army;

S. 1653. An act to provide American register for the steam yacht Diana;

S. 8348. An act waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Minor Meriwether, jr.;

S. 8377. An act to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River in Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minn.;

S. 8439. An act restricting the issuance of interlocutory injunctions to suspend the enforcement of the statute of a State or of an order made by an administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State;

S. 8538. An act to authorize the St. Louis & Western Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, near Weldon Springs Landing, in the State of Missouri;

S. 8539. An act to authorize the St. Louis Belt, Illinois & Eastern Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, near the mouth of the Missouri River;

S. 8429. An act to create a board of local inspectors, Steamboat-Inspection Service, for the port of Los Angeles, Cal.;

S. 8443. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, Mo.; and

S. 8536. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in Beltrami County, in the State of Minnesota.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 9 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 9 o'clock to-night.

EVENING SESSION.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session.

CHARLES S. REED.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] presents a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 798 (H. Rept. 1612).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Charles S. Reed, the sum of $60 for services rendered as a laborer in the Doorkeeper's office during the month of July, 1910.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the person in this case, who is to receive by reason of this resolution, if it should pass, $60, was a colored laborer in this Capitol. He was discharged, so far as the record is concerned, on the 30th day of June, 1910. He was not notified of that discharge, and he worked during the month of July. He did not find out that he was discharged until the end of the month.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ALBERT M. CARPENTER.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 265 (H. Rept. 1614).

Resolved, That Albert M. Carpenter, assistant librarian, House of Representatives, be paid $95 out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, for 21 days' services, from May 11 to May 31, 1911, inclusive.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Carpenter was appointed and sworn in as the assistant librarian upstairs on the 7th day of May, 1911, and the then assistant librarian insisted that we could not displace him. After a day or two an arrangement was made by which he should hold his position until the 1st day of June. The other man, however, who had been sworn in and had begun his work, performed the duties of the office from the 11th day of May until the 1st day of July without compensation.

Mr. MANN. They had a man up there who could perform the duties, anyhow, without him.

Mr. LLOYD. The only reason for this is to provide compensation for the man who rendered the services and did not receive pay.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

ALLEN D. ALBERT.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will present the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 827 (H. Rept. 1613).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to Allen D. Albert, for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

Mr. MANN. Is this the usual amount?

Mr. LLOYD. The usual amount; yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does that include one clerk?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Are there not two?

Mr. LLOYD. The other was assigned to the Committee on Pensions and will be taken care of in another place. There is an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after the word "during," strike out the words "the third session of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

JOSEPH M. M'COY.

Mr. LLOYD. I also present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 832 (H. Rept. 1610).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to Joseph M. McCoy, for extra and expert services rendered to the Committee on Pensions during the third session of the Sixty-second Congress, as assistant clerk to said committee by detail from the Bureau of Pensions, pursuant to law.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 2, by striking out the figures "1,200" and inserting the figures "750."

In line 4, strike out the words "the third session of."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this provides for the same pay that this individual has been receiving in the past.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

DRUSILLA GARDEN.

Mr. LLOYD. I also offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 871 (H. Rept. 1611).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund, to Drusilla Garden, executrix of A. P. Garden, late a messenger of the House, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such employee and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, for the funeral expenses of said A. P. Garden.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual amount in the case of an employee who dies.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

G. D. ELLIS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 851 (H. Rept. 1616).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House $1,200 to G. D. Ellis for extra and expert services rendered during the first, second, and third sessions of the Sixty-second Congress in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives in briefing petitions and documents, in compiling indexes for Clerk's reports, in compiling Congressional Vest-Pocket Directories, in compiling copies of national party platforms, in compiling House telephone directories and directories of Members, in indexing House Journal, in indexing omnibus claims bill, and in assisting in House enrolling room, as employee detailed from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Ellis was detailed from the Government Printing Office to perform the work that is indicated in the resolution. He has prepared the several directories which you have all received, the several vest-pocket directories, the telephone directories, the platform directories, and the official directory of Members here in the House.

At the beginning of the session, as everybody is aware, there were several persons employed in the Clerk's office who are no longer employed, and it happened to be no one's duty to perform this extra and special work which this individual, by reason of his detail, performed. He rendered the service; he did splendid service; he did most of it outside of the usual working hours. The committee thinks it is a proper resolution.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Speaker, there were a number of places abolished at the beginning of this Congress, and the statement was then made that there were sufficient employees of the House left to render all the service which was required. Now we find that there was detailed from the Government Printing Office—by what authority I do not know—a man to perform part of the services which gentlemen on that side said would be performed by the regular officials of the House; and in addition to obtaining the detail of the man from the Government Printing Office it is now proposed to pay him in addition to his regular salary in the Government Printing Office a salary here.

I notice that one of the duties performed is that of indexing the House Journal. I remember when the Journal indexer was abolished. It was said that the clerks in the office of the Clerk, or in the office or room of the Journal Clerk, were to perform all that service. I do not know what service this gentleman may have performed; but by what authority was he employed? We were told places were abolished. Now we authorize the detail from the Government Printing Office, and we authorize the employment of this man to perform duties which we were told would be performed by the regular official force of the House.

Mr. LLOYD. Question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. I notice they can not answer the questions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

CLERICAL ASSISTANCE, COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 869 (H. Rept. 1615).

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House not to exceed $150 for additional clerical assistance to the Committee on Enrolled Bills during the remainder of the present session upon the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual allowance paid at the close of the session on account of the extraordinary service that is necessary to be performed.

Mr. MANN. This is simply for the remainder of the session?

Mr. LLOYD. It is for the remainder of the session from the time this resolution was reported from the committee. Unfortunately I have been giving way to others on the floor for about three days, and the probabilities are that people have been employed during that time.

Mr. MANN. I would like to hear the resolution reported again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether extra services have been actually rendered or not. For fear that the services have been rendered and that this will not cover them, I would like to amend the resolution by striking out the word "additional," in line 2, and the words "the remainder of," in lines 3 and 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, in line 2, the word "additional," and in lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "the remainder of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon the amendments to the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. OVERMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 27789. An act to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes;

H. R. 28632. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Twelve Mile Bayou in Caddo Parish, La.; and

H. R. 28633. An act to amend the act approved January 27, 1912, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Caddo Lake in Louisiana."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25780) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25781. An act to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911; and

H. R. 28093. An act to amend the general pension act of May 11, 1912.

SEAMEN IN THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 23673) to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this is what is known as the seamen's bill. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], as I understand, is favorable to the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. When the bill passed the House the gentleman from Washington was in opposition to much of the bill. I understand that now the gentleman from Washington is agreeable to the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri, to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. He is.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman very briefly indicate to the House what the essential differences are between the Senate amendment and the House bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say this for the benefit of the Members of the House——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will in a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to the bill. I understand the bill will pass, and although the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] may have withdrawn his objection, I want to ask now whether some time can be conceded to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to discuss the provisions of the bill at this time.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I told the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that I would yield to him some time. I also told the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] that I would yield to him five minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced early in this Congress and referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. It was considered by a subcommittee, of which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] was chairman, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] was a member, with others, and was given laborious consideration for more than two months, and was reported back to the House early in May last.

The purpose of this legislation is to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaties in relation thereto, and to secure greater safety of life and property at sea. Many of the provisions of the bill, if they had been enacted into law and the law had been enforced prior to that awful tragedy, might have mitigated the great disaster that occurred in April last, when the Titanic sank at sea.

The bill passed the House about the 5th of August last, and has been considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce from that time at intervals until a few days ago, when it was reported back to the Senate, and passed the Senate night before last—I believe at about 8 o'clock—and was reported to the House on yesterday.

I doubt if any piece of legislation pending in this Congress has received more consideration than this bill has. Extensive hearings were held before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries on behalf of the shipowners and on behalf of the seamen.

In the Senate extended hearings were held on behalf of both these interests. The bill was considered by a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, of which Senator BURTON, of Ohio, was chairman. All the provisions of the House bill were stricken out and the amendment now pending substituted therefor. The Senate amendment embraces many of the provisions of the House bill without any change whatever. There are, however, some material changes; some of them, I think, improve the bill——

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Let me explain the bill briefly, and then I will yield to the gentleman. I think some of the changes improve the bill, while in other respects we think the bill is not so good as when it passed the House. But coming into the House at so late an hour in the session, the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries thought it better to move to concur in the Senate amendment than to send the bill to conference, as the session is near its close and it would be impossible to consider it at length or in detail. In this view we are in accord not only with the members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries but with the members of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce, which had the bill under consideration for a great length of time and gave it laborious and able consideration.

Mr. LEVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. LEVY. Has not the bill been entirely revised; is not this a new bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is not.

Mr. LEVY. The best portion of it has been revised.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Three-quarters of it, I should say, is in the same language.

Mr. LEVY. I think that the Senate changed the whole aspect of the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not all all. As I say, the Senate amendment does modify the bill to some extent. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to discuss this bill at length when there is much important business pending. I promised to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, my esteemed colleague on the committee [Mr. GREENE]. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] five minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, for a number of years there has been an attempt before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I have been a member during my entire service in this House, to amend the laws in relation to seamen. It has been utterly impossible in the various years that have passed in the consideration of a bill of this character to prepare one that would meet the approval of the seamen and also of the vessel owners. We have devoted a great deal of time to it in years past, and yet after all no agreement has ever been reached until during the last session of this Congress.

I am not so familiar with the amendments that have been put upon it by the Senate as to be able to take it up and explain it in detail, but my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington, informs me that he has given considerable attention to the bill, and while it does not in every feature meet his approval and has not met the approval of a number of his constituents, yet he believes the bill has been improved by the action of the Senate and that it is a better bill than it was when it went from the House.

There are many good features in the bill, and these features give better protection to the seamen in every way, and also provide for better care for the passengers than the existing law. It will increase the expense of management. There is no question about that, because it increases the number of seamen that will be employed. It will add to the cost of maintaining the vessels, and I presume that those who use the vessels will have to contribute toward the payment which will be necessary to compensate the owners of vessels for whatever improvements they may be compelled to make. That is something that will not concern me or many Members of the House personally.

I believe in looking over the bill, as briefly as I have had opportunity to do, that it is in the main an improvement over the existing law. It certainly is an improvement in behalf of the seamen themselves.

Many vessel owners have thought it was not necessary to make the many changes called for by this bill. I believe it would be utterly impossible to prepare a bill that would satisfy every vessel owner in all its features and at the same time meet the approval of the seamen. If there is any benefit to come to any body of men, particularly in this bill, it is the benefit which the men will receive who bear the hardships incident to the dangers of service upon the sea. Their burdens will be lightened somewhat by the employment of additional men, and I am not sure but that in some respects it is absolutely necessary to provide the additional equipment for the safety and care of the passengers and the proper maintenance and better protection of the vessel. Considering this bill from the broadest standpoint, I believe this House ought to accept it as it comes to us from the Senate, and therefore I shall vote for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, no one would do more to aid the seamen than myself. My father followed the sea all his life, and no one appreciates more than I do the valor and hardships of those who go down to the sea in ships. I believe the Democratic Party has always believed in building up our merchant marine. If this bill passes, I believe it will injure to a great extent our merchant marine. The cost of running steamships in some cases is nearly 97 per cent.

I have been unable to go over entirely this proposition which comes in at this late hour, because I could not obtain a copy of the Senate amendment. The bill as it comes from the Senate is almost entirely changed to a new bill. It is very unjust to the merchant marine, to the mercantile interests. The maritime exchanges are all opposed to it. I believe it is very unfair to a great extent to the sailors, although to some extent it gives benefits to the sailors at the expense of the owners.

It would injure to a great extent the merchant marine of the United States. We ought to do more to build up the merchant marine of the United States. As I, in many instances, have stated before, the cost in many cases is very high. Sailors receive $50 a month, and 50 cents an hour overtime when they work more than eight hours a day. This is equal to $90 a month. If we go into this proposition, instead of building up our merchant marine we will virtually aid to harm it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that all of the seamen on the Pacific coast are in favor of this bill and have been urging it for years?

Mr. LEVY. I never so understood. I have understood that there was only one agent who claimed to represent all our sailors in Washington.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Furuseth has been here for four years urging this bill on behalf of the seamen of the West.

Mr. LEVY. The shipping interest of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts is opposed to it for the reason that it will injure our commerce. I wish to see our flag float in every port. [Applause.]

Those of us who have traveled into foreign countries know that we seldom see Old Glory floating to the breeze. It is a rare sight, and it is a splendid emotion that every American feels when the Star Spangled Banner meets his eye.

I want to have our flag float on every sea, as it did in other days, and because I believe this bill restricts our opportunities I am opposed to it. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, while this is not an appropriation bill which comes back from the Senate with a rider that is offensive, it is a bill which originated in the House, which comes back with a substitute which takes the place of the original bill, and gives the House no opportunity to carefully consider the Senate propositions. The Senate substitute, however, as I have hurriedly read it, is an improvement on the original bill, which was highly objectionable to the shipping interests along the Atlantic seaboard. Granted that we all want to see a better condition of living for the sailors, those who go upon the ships, we ought also, and must always, bear in mind that the welfare of the employee upon shipboard depends very largely upon the ability of the shipowner or the shipmaster to transact business; and one of the real objections to this bill is that while it undertakes in a very radical way to care for the welfare of the seamen it shows very little regard for the employer or the owner of the ship. The two are interdependent. The real interest of the man employed upon the ship is in having the master of the ship or the owner of the ship successful in his business, and to a certain extent this bill curbs and discharges the man who engages in the shipping business.

One of the features that has been taken out of the original bill by the Senate substitute is that very drastic paragraph which was found on page 16 of the Alexander or Wilson bill providing that the collector of customs must, upon the affidavit of a single individual—some discharged employee, perhaps, or some dissatisfied seaman, or an agitator of some sort or other—actually hold up a trans-Atlantic steamer until, perchance, the man making the affidavit had been satisfied. As I understand the substitute, that feature has been eliminated.

But there are a series of matters that our friends on the other side may have to consider if this bill passes. The very last paragraph raises a controversy as to international law, for it proposes to withdraw those treaties with foreign nations that have to do with the arrest or imprisonment of sailors, both foreign and domestic.

I will not attempt in five minutes to go into details of this measure. Every line of it is serious to the business interests along every coast of this country; but I do want to say with regard to the great Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries that during the pendency of this Congress it has undertaken many radical steps which will affect for good or ill the navigation interests of the country. This day it made a step forward toward giving American registry to foreign-built ships. If the Democratic Party proposes to give American registry to foreign builders, then there must be an accounting to those who invest their capital in ships and those who draw their wages from the American shipyards. If we are now to override the navigation laws of the country that protect American interests, then of course the responsibility will be upon those who pass this kind of legislation. The chairman of this committee has been very active in taking up and considering these important measures. He may be right, or——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein memorials from the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange and from the Philadelphia Board of Trade, and an article from the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, February 19, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The memorials and article referred to are as follows:

PHILADELPHIA BOARD OF TRADE,
Philadelphia.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

This memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade respectfully represents:

That an examination of the provisions of H. R. bill No. 23673, known as the "Wilson seamen's bill," proves it to be radical and vicious and if enacted as law will further cripple the American merchant marine in its already unequal competition with foreign tonnage sailing under more liberal laws;

That its provisions virtually serve as an abrogation of the treaties of the United States with 11 nations so far as bearing upon the arrest of deserting sailors;

That instead of relieving the American shipping of many of the disabilities now experienced the bill as drawn will add to the difficulties now existing in profitably operating ships under the American flag;

That the board favors the appointment of a commission charged with the duty of revising the present navigation laws, but deprecates such an attempted revision by means of special legislation as proposed by the measure under consideration;

That the board fully appreciates the necessity of amending the laws governing the American merchant marine, but does not find that the bill under criticism is calculated to encourage the building or owning of ships to be sailed under an American register: Therefore

Your memorialist, the Philadelphia Board of Trade, petitions your honorable bodies to withhold your approval from H. R. bill No. 23673 in its present form.

And your memorialist will ever pray.

President Philadelphia Board of Trade.

SEAMEN'S LEGISLATION.

THE PHILADELPHIA MARITIME EXCHANGE.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, held the 23d day of December, 1912, the following preamble and resolution was authorized:

"Whereas on August 3, 1912, during the second session of the Sixty-second Congress, a bill (H. R. 23673) commonly known as the Wilson or seamen's bill passed the House of Representatives and is now being considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce; and

"Whereas the title of this bill, namely, 'An act to abolish the involuntary servitude imposed upon seamen in the merchant marine of the United States while in foreign ports and the involuntary servitude imposed upon the seamen of the merchant marine of foreign countries while in ports of the United States, to prevent unskilled manning of American vessels, to encourage the training of boys in the American merchant marine, for the further protection of life at sea, and to amend the laws relative to seamen,' is misleading, and the effect of its enactment would be to benefit alien seamen rather than to foster the commerce of the United States; and

"Whereas the requirements of the bill having reference to wages and hours of service of seamen are hardly applicable alike to the varied types of vessels—on coal and oil burning steamers, on those engaged in carrying mail, passengers, perishable freight, etc., or on vessels making short runs with Sunday and night stops; and

"Whereas the bill makes it possible for any person to tie up a ship six hours before her scheduled sailing time in order that a muster of the crew shall be had to ascertain whether the master and owner have complied with every provision of the act, and thereby delaying the sailing of the vessel; and

"Whereas the bill requires that many steamers shall carry a greater number of seamen than are absolutely necessary for their operation; and

"Whereas the provisions of the bill will greatly increase the cost of operation, which increased cost must in the ordinary course of business be recovered from the general public in transportation rates: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange respectfully and earnestly protests against the enactment into law of the bill in its present form, but would express the opinion that while the law should require all shipowners to provide fully for the safety of life and property at sea, that safety could probably be better secured by other means than under the arbitrary and unjust provisions of this bill: And be it further

"Resolved, That the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange respectfully petition that consideration be given by the Congress of the United States to the appointment of a commission to revise existing navigation laws and thereby bring about in a more thorough and satisfactory manner the ends desired than by the means of special legislation such as is proposed in the bill under consideration."

THE PHILADELPHIA MARITIME EXCHANGE,
[SEAL.] By J. W. V. HOLTEN, President.

MORE OPPOSITION TO THE SEAMEN'S BILL—TRADE ORGANIZATIONS, LIKE SHIPPERS, FEAR TRANSFER OF POWER TO LABOR UNIONS—EXCHANGE FRAMES PROTEST.

Boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and similar bodies throughout the country have united with the shipping interests in protesting against many of the clauses in the act now under consideration by the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate, known as the Wilson seamen's union bill. A great portion of the bill is considered perfectly fair, and its passage would be unopposed by shipping men were it not for several sections which, they declare, would place such an unnecessary burden on the shoulders of shipowners and at the same time require such an increased charge to the public to be served as to practically destroy the commerce of the country.

In short, they assert that the passage of the bill by the Senate in the same form in which it passed the House of Representatives would transfer nearly all authority from the masters of vessels to the labor unions, while leaving the responsibility with the former, which they characterize as manifestly unfair.

The following report was recently made to the board of directors of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange by its secretary, Edward R. Shearwood, and was immediately referred to the committee on commerce and navigation of that body, with instructions to forward a vigorous protest to Senator BURTON, of Ohio, chairman of the subcommittee of the Senate considering the bill, as well as the general Committee on Commerce, to which the bill is likely to be reported this week.

POINTS OF PROTEST.

It reads as follows:

"The bill as presented will require on many steamers twice the number of seamen necessary and as now required by the United States inspectors. Under its provisions it will be practically impossible for a shipowner to employ any member of his crew who is not a member of a labor union, and by its requirements the labor unions will have power to fix wages periodically at any figure their leaders may demand, irrespective of the value of services rendered.

"It may be assumed that the labor unions in advocating the passage of this bill have been acting more in their own selfish interests than with a desire to secure the safety of passengers at sea, and if the bill becomes a law these unions will be in a position to dictate to shipowners not only regarding wages but as to hours of labor and discipline on board the ship, thus practically taking from the master the control of his vessel and crew, now given him by law, without relieving him of any of his present responsibility, and thereby decreasing the protection of life and property at sea.

"The enactment of the bill in its present form will so greatly increase the expenses of the shipowner that he will be compelled to recoup from shippers and the general public in transportation rates sufficient to meet the increased cost of operating his vessel."

A USELESS PROVISION.

The features of the bill which, it is claimed by the shipping men, would work such disaster are, first, the "watch-and-watch" provision, which requires that on all merchant vessels of the United States "while at sea the sailors shall be divided into at least two and the firemen into at least three watches, which shall be kept on duty alternately for the performance of ordinary work incident to the sailing and management of the vessel."

It is declared that on vessels whose voyages include many ports of call this would require double the number of men to be carried as formerly, without adding anything whatever to the safety of life or property at sea, whereas under ordinary conditions this rule has always been the custom on deep-water ships. But the act gives the master no discretion in the matter.

PREMIUM ON DESERTION.

Second, the provision that every seaman shall be entitled to receive half of his wages due him at every port where a stop shall be made. This, it is said, is putting a premium on "shore sprees" and desertion, particularly as the bill also makes it compulsory that a master shall not sail from any port without a full crew, which must be hired at union wages.

Heretofore it has been understood that the bulk of a seaman's wages should be paid him on the completion of the round voyage for which he has signed, although there is no objection to the advance of a moderate sum during shore leave.

DEFINITION OF "ABLE SEAMAN."

Third, and perhaps this is the clause to which the greatest exception is taken, the provision that no passenger vessel shall be permitted to sail "unless she shall have a sufficient crew to man each lifeboat with not less than two men of the rating of able seaman or higher." The question at once arises, What is an able seaman? and this the bill defines as follows: "No person shall be rated as an able seaman unless he is 19 years of age or upward and has had at least three years' service on deck at sea or on the Great Lakes."

It is pointed out that men may be far above this age limit and have been at sea for many more years than three and still not be an "able seaman," and, further, that, like the provision regarding watches, this would make it necessary that passenger vessels carry more seamen than are needed for the work of the ship.

The shipping men declare that they have no quarrel with a provision that there shall be among the entire crew of the vessel at least two men competent for lifeboat duty for every lifeboat required by the certificate of inspection, but it is claimed that among the crew of any passenger vessel as at present constituted there will be found more than sufficient men competent for such duty, such as the men in the engineer's and steward's department.

It is also asserted that the definition of "able seaman" is nothing more than saying that a seaman must be a member of a labor union, since all men must be hired from the unions, and must receive a fixed wage, no matter what his personal qualifications may be. It is pointed out that the Federal court of appeals has ruled against the time of service as a conclusive factor in determining the qualifications of pilots, and it is asked why this should not be as true of seamen as of pilots.

It is understood that the bill has been considerably modified in the subcommittee and that, if so reported by the general committee to the Senate, Senator LA FOLLETTE will take charge of it and endeavor to inject still more drastic provisions, perhaps sufficient to prevent its passage during the present session.

This is considered as a favorable situation for the labor unions, in view of the increased number of labor Congressmen embodied in the incoming Congress, which is expected to facilitate the passage of the bill in a form most favorable to the unions.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I was appointed chairman of this Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the Fifty-fourth Congress and continued in that service for two or three Congresses following. That committee took up with great care the examination of the questions between the seamen and the shippers or the masters of vessels. We found then under the laws a bad condition among the sailors; that they were often fed upon poor or half rations when they were at sea, and their rights were not properly respected by the people who employed them. We went into the question with great thoroughness and reported a bill to the House covering all points of difference between the master and the seamen. That bill was thoroughly discussed in the House, and it finally passed substantially as it came from the committee. We went so far as to prescribe the ration that should be furnished, and a bill of fare that would well keep any American citizen on land or sea was one of the features of that bill. The bill went to the Senate and came back here with some of the good things which we had put there eliminated, but there was much of it left, and it was in a degree satisfactory to all the parties in interest, so satisfactory that it has hardly been amended up to this day, when the present chairman took hold of the matter of the defects which were still left. I commend him and the committee for the diligence with which they have studied this question. This question of interfering with treaties of other nations is a serious question, and one which I understand the Senate has taken into consideration, and they have made amendments to the bill which they believe will relieve that situation. I have not had an opportunity to study those amendments, but I believe that this bill is a right step in advance and will result in a benefit both to masters of vessels and to the seamen.

Mr. Speaker, I was assailed in the last campaign because I voted against the syndicate trust down in Florida which seeks to prey upon the commerce of the seas under the plea that they are necessary to pilot vessels into the harbors. I did try to regulate that. It will some time regulate itself. This question of a free ship as to pilotage is one that the States have taken hold of and gradually they are eliminating it, and they are breaking up the absurd system that where a sailing vessel employs a tug and the tug master is a pilot and knows the channel that still the captain shall employ one of these gentlemen to guide the pilot on the tug who belongs there. I was assailed for this and I had a certificate volunteered to me from the Sailors' Union that no man had made greater advance and done more to relieve the condition of the sailors who sail from the ports of the United States up to that date than I had. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the differences between the two bills, the one passed by the House and the Senate amendment, there can be no question but that this bill marks a forward step in the progress of humanity and in attaining the object of man, and I hope the Senate amendment will be agreed to. Mr. Speaker, one gentleman who has been most prominent in connection with this bill, both in the committee and on the floor, is a Member of this House, who has been also prominent in other labor legislation which has been enacted by Congress for years, and I hope that we are saluting the next Secretary of Labor. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the next Secretary of Labor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Secretary of Labor is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the purposes of this bill are threefold. First, to promote the freedom of seamen; second, to secure safety of travel at sea; and, third, to equalize the cost of operation of American vessels with those of foreign vessels in order that we may be in a position to build up a merchant marine without resorting to subsidies. [Applause.] Those general ideas were carried through the bill as it passed the House. They have been retained in the bill as it passed the Senate. There have been some modifications of the bill, some changes in the methods by which it is proposed to reach these ends. Some of those changes in my judgment are improvements; other changes injure the purposes for which the bill has been presented. The principal changes are these: The Senate limits the operations of the bill to vessels of 300 tons or upward. The House bill made no such limitation. There were some features of it where the limitation to 100 tons was included.

It provides that it shall not apply, so far as the three-watch system for firemen and the watch-and-watch system for deck hands are concerned, to those vessels which have a voyage of less than 24 hours from port of starting to port of termination of the voyage, thereby making it possible to work those in the firerooms on short runs for more than eight hours, while the original House bill provided an eight-hour limitation for those in the fireroom.

In my judgment, that is an injury to the bill. The House bill provided that 75 per cent of all of the seamen should be able to understand the language of the officers—any orders that might be given to them. The Senate qualifies that by providing that where a sufficient number of interpreters are provided—and the Senate states that a sufficient number of interpreters is an interpreter for every lifeboat there is upon the vessel—it will not be necessary for the 75 per cent of the crew to understand the officers, that number of interpreters taking the place of the 75 per cent who understand the orders.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The House bill provided a standard of efficiency of three years' service at sea. The Senate bill retains that standard. The House required 40 per cent of the crew in the first year, and gradually increasing it 5 per cent each year, until 65 per cent of the crew should be men of that rating. The Senate strikes out that requirement of from 40 to 65 per cent, and in lieu thereof it requires that the wheelsmen and lookout men shall be men of this rating, and that there shall be at least two men who shall be practical lifeboat men for every lifeboat—a new term in sea parlance—who shall be of this rating. So that it reaches practically the same result by a different method. It provides two men for each lifeboat who have demonstrated by actual test that they are efficient in handling a boat.

Those are the principal differences in the Senate bill as compared with the House bill. I may add, however, that those men who are on the lookout and at the wheels in the House bill were only divided into watch-and-watch. In the Senate bill they are divided into three watches; or, in other words, in the House bill they might be required to work for 12 hours per day; in the Senate bill they are required to work 8 hours per day. And while there are some features in the changes that have been made by the Senate in this bill with which I do not agree, the general intent and purpose of the original bill is carried out, and it is a great advance upon existing law. And therefore, I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the bill will be agreed to.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to address myself to the bill before us, but to correct a misstatement upon this floor when a Member of this body, in speaking of the docks and piers of various cities along the Atlantic seaboard, made reference to the city of Baltimore, saying:

> I have heard testimony before my committee to the effect that no vessel not controlled or operated by the Pennsylvania Railroad has any place in the city of Baltimore where it could load or unload, because the Pennsylvania Railroad controlled the frontage and dockage, and therefore had possession of the trade and commerce coming from the high seas into that port. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 27, 1913, p. 2142.)

This statement was made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], and I am making these few remarks for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that the gentleman must have gotten his information from some one who did not know the real conditions, but, as I am not informed as to when he received this information, I can not gather whether it related to the time prior to the great fire in Baltimore in the year 1904—when we had not as many public piers—or circumstances since that time. It is a fact that the city of Baltimore has dock space for all who may apply, and that dock space is subject to the control and is the property of Baltimore city. Baltimore has spent between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000 to prevent just such conditions, and is still spending a large sum of money in the construction of other piers and docks for the accommodation of the trade upon the Chesapeake Bay, its tributaries, and from the ocean. We have Piers 1, 2, and 3, which were leased for a term of years. Pier 4 is reserved for bay boats; Pier 5 is open to all boats, except a small portion at the south end thereof; and Pier 6 is entirely open to all commerce. Moreover, the city is now constructing at the foot of Broadway a combined commercial and recreation pier.

This will be one of the largest piers in the city, and the water there is sufficiently deep to accommodate the largest steamship that plies the ocean. The water at Piers 5 and 6 will accommodate boats drawing not over 27 feet of water, and this will accommodate all bay boats, those plying between southern ports and the city of Baltimore, and most ocean steamships.

There is no monopoly of pier space in Baltimore, and Baltimore does not propose to have any monopoly by railroads or any other corporation of its water front. It has spent and is spending millions to prevent just such conditions, and any and all companies, whether plying upon the waters of our country or coming from abroad, will find ample accommodations without submitting to any monopoly if they will but apply to the proper authorities of our city.

I am not informed as to the condition in other seaboard cities, but I am informed as to those of my city, and I can say to the House and to the people of the country that Baltimore's port is open and ready for the receipt of commerce from every section. We are not only building for the present, but we are building for the future; and when the immense trade which we all hope will come from the opening of the Panama Canal, Baltimore's gates will be found wide open to take care of the trade that comes her way.

I am not making these remarks to criticize in any manner those of the gentleman from Indiana, but merely for the purpose of placing Baltimore city and its port facilities in the proper light before the people.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD, and to follow my remarks, a letter from His Honor James H. Preston, mayor of Baltimore city, dated February 1, 1913, and also an article from the Baltimore News, dated January 27, 1913, by Oscar F. Lackey, Esq., the harbor engineer of Baltimore.

The matter referred to is as follows:

MAYOR'S OFFICE,
Baltimore, Md., February 1, 1913.

Hon. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. LINTHICUM: I beg to call your attention to the statement of Representative CULLOP, of Indiana, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I think our terminal facilities, piers, etc., in Baltimore, have been exceptionally well planned and built along progressive lines for the future growth and development of the city and for the future use of the shipping demands of the port. We have spent within the past few years, and are spending, $6,000,000 in our port facilities.

In a recent case before the Interstate Commerce Commission, the dock commissioner of New York testified that New York had no advantage over Baltimore in regard to the excellence of its harbors.

I think attention ought to be called to the fact that there are no port charges at all in Baltimore, as against a one dollar a ton charge in New York, and proportionate amounts in other great cities of the Atlantic seaboard. This total freedom from port charges, together with our enormous dock system already built—and now in course of construction—all ought to be called to the attention of the country in some way.

The terminal facilities in Baltimore are free from railroad companies' control; we have parts of two vacant piers unoccupied; we have overbuilt the city so far as pier space is concerned. This pier space is for rent, and is not under the control of any railroad or other corporation, but they are in every sense municipal piers. In addition to this we are building a tremendous pier at the foot of Broadway, to accommodate the biggest of the ocean liners that can come to Baltimore; we are also dredging for a pier on the south side of the harbor. Mr. CULLOP was not informed on the subject when he intimated that the terminals in Baltimore were controlled by the railroads. We have a great many railroads and good railroad terminals, and would like to have more, but the present terminals are not exclusively for the railroad companies, and can not be used in restraint of trade.

In addition to this, some consideration ought to be given by the Federal Government to the fact that Baltimore maintains two ice boats, and with these boats keeps the Patapsco River and the Chesapeake Bay open to navigation; and particularly last winter it cost a great deal of money to do this—in injury to the boats and in the cost of maintaining the boats through the winter. In addition to the above, Baltimore dredges its own channel within the harbor without any assistance from the Federal Government.

I wrote the Eastern Shore Steamship Development Co. January 31, in reply to a letter received by Harbor Engineer Lackey, as follows:

"Your letter of January 29 to Mr. O. F. Lackey, harbor engineer, has been shown to me, and I beg to say in reply thereto that you have been misinformed as to the facts mentioned in your letter.

"Neither the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroads, nor anyone else has any control of the docks of the city of Baltimore except the mayor and city council.

"We have four times as much unoccupied space as you will probably require for your steamship company directly at Pratt Street, the most central location in Baltimore; and to show you that your statement is untrue I will guarantee to obtain for you at the rate paid by other people for the same space any of this unoccupied space that you might require within one month after we have your written application therefor. We have nothing to do with your traffic arrangements with the Pennsylvania or Baltimore & Ohio Railroads, but we can and will assure you that you can get pier space here if you are in earnest, whether they consent or not."

I think the above letter covers the case pretty thoroughly.

Yours, very truly,

JAMES H. PRESTON, Mayor.

[From the Baltimore News, Jan. 28, 1913.]

DENIES RAILROADS' MONOPOLY OF PIERS—HARBOR ENGINEER TO REFUTE STATEMENTS MADE IN CONGRESS COMMITTEE—MONEY TO DREDGE HARBOR AT STAKE—TO CUT OFF APPROPRIATION WOULD BE SERIOUS BLOW TO CITY'S COMMERCE.

Aroused by the charge made before the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress that the Pennsylvania Railroad dominates the pier space at Baltimore to such an extent that none other than railroad-owned vessels could find here a landing place at which to discharge their cargoes, Harbor Engineer Oscar F. Lackey to-day announced his purpose of laying the real facts before Mayor Preston, with a request that he ask for a meeting of the Maryland Representatives in Congress so that the charges could be formally and officially denied.

Not only did Mr. Lackey brand the assertion as untrue, but he stated that Baltimore had spent between $6,000,000 and $8,000,000 to prevent such a condition. The charge was made at a hearing before the congressional committee which is considering appropriations for widening and deepening the harbor, the claim being made that no advances should be made by the National Government, as corporations had gobbled up the available space, shutting out competition, and that railroads should be made to finance harbor and waterways improvements. Such action on the part of Congress would be regarded as a death blow to the commerce at all Atlantic ports where dredging is absolutely necessary if the big ocean liners are to effect an entrance.

PIER SPACE OPEN.

Mr. Lackey summarized the conditions at the port of Baltimore from a municipal standpoint as follows:

Piers 1, 2, and 3: Leased for 50 years.
Pier 4: Reserved for bay boats.
Pier 5: Open to all boats except a small portion at the south end.
Pier 6: All open.

Moreover, the city is now at work building another pier near the foot of Broadway, referred to as Recreation Pier, but which Mr. Lackey says is a misnomer, as it really should be called Commercial Pier, as it stands on the site of a wharf that bore that name. This pier will also be open.

It happens that the entrance to Piers 5 and 6 is by means of a waterway that can float a steamer drawing no more than 27 feet of water. This is sufficient for all bay vessels and coastwise steamers, and most, if not all, transient ocean steamers can dock at it. The regular ocean liners can not, as they require about 32 feet of water in which to dock. The new commercial pier will afford this facility, so that any and all vessels can pull up beside it. When it has been completed no steamer need turn away from Baltimore for lack of accommodations.

STATEMENT UNFAIR.

"As far as Baltimore is concerned," declared Engineer Lackey, "the statement made before the committee relative to the monopolization of pier space is entirely untrue. The injustice of it must impress the people of the city all the more from the fact that they have spent from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 to prevent the very condition that is now erroneously alleged to exist. I am preparing a statement of facts for the mayor, which I shall submit to him with a request that he lay them before the State's Representatives in Congress, so that they may be in a position to refute such charges in the future.

"As Piers 1, 2, and 3 were completed they were rented for 50 years. This was a mistake. It may be recalled, however, that the debt for this improvement was contracted at the period of the great fire, when everyone was almost in a panic lest the venture would add further to the burdens of the city and the taxpayers. As a result of this condition the board of estimates, facing this proposition as a new thing, seized upon the long-term rental project as the way out of any possible loss to the people of Baltimore. Now the situation is better understood.

"Notwithstanding this mistake the city has absolutely in its control the bay Pier No. 4 and Piers 5 and 6, except a small portion at one end of Pier 5, which is open to any steamer coming to Baltimore. Unfortunately the depth of water approaching 5 and 6 is not sufficient for ocean liners, but the new pier at Commercial Wharf will provide the necessary depth of water.

SAN FRANCISCO SYSTEM.

"San Francisco has a scheme of rentals that I regard as an admirable one, and it has been found to work well in practice. The plan there is to rent the piers as we do here, giving the renter only the preferential right to the pier space. Hence if the pier is not filled with freight and the dock space occupied by a steamer of the company having the first claim, any other vessel can be docked at the pier. Charges against the company other than the one having the preference are imposed by the city. This money is turned over to the company having the first preference. The whole matter is controlled by a city official.

"However, the criticism is unfair as far as Baltimore is concerned, and I believe it is also unfair as far as it pertains to Boston and Philadelphia, although there may be an element of truth in it as far as New York is concerned. That, however, is the business of those cities. I intend to refute the statement with facts as far as it applies to this port."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the seamen's bill comes again before the House in the form of a Senate amendment. This amendment is really a substitute for the bill the House passed. For many years legislation of this character has been urged. I have always opposed this legislation in the form of the House bill. In doing so I felt that I was doing a service for my country. I was fighting to keep the American flag on the ocean. I was fighting to keep the commerce on the Pacific from being entirely controlled by Japanese vessels. I was fighting to keep the cities of the Pacific coast of this country from being injured and their commerce destroyed for the benefit of the cities of British Columbia. I believed that the House bill would greatly injure the shipping and the commerce of this country without in the least bettering the condition of the American seaman. I have never opposed any legislation that, in my judgment, would in the least degree benefit the American sailor. There are some provisions in this bill that will benefit him, in regard to the payment of wages, manning, and crew space. There is no part of this bill but what is an improvement of the present law so far as concerns seamen; for this reason I shall not oppose the bill, although I think it is open to most serious objections in some of its provisions.

It provides for the abrogation of many of our commercial treaties. I do not think this should be done without an attempt to get an agreement with other countries. I believe that such action on our part will lead to most serious commercial complications. I can not believe that there is any such emergency as will justify such action on our part. We should take this matter up through diplomatic channels first. But as this legislation has been long urged, and as this is the closing hours of the session, I shall not seek to prevent its passage, trusting that we may succeed in getting other nations to join with us in abolishing punishment by imprisonment for desertion. I have always been in favor of this proposition, and am now, notwithstanding that it will be not for the benefit of the American sailor, but for the benefit of those who have not sufficient regard for this country to become citizens.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

CONDEMNED CANNON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill S. 8273, an act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls, with Senate amendments.

Senate amendment No. 1 was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House of Representatives No. 1 to the bill "authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls," with the following amendment: After line 3, page 1, of said amendment, insert:

"To the city of Berlin, in the State of Wisconsin, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces, and a suitable outfit of cannon balls."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede from the House amendments Nos. 2, 3, 7, 30, and 32 to the Senate bill, and agree to the balance of said amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I could not understand what that was.

Mr. HAY. The Senate struck out five items, because it turned out that those items had already been provided for in a bill which was passed at the first session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] moves to recede from those amendments. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a recess for 15 minutes, and ask Members of the House to remain in the Chamber, as some of our friends on the other side of the House desire to do honor to their worthy and distinguished leader. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to take a recess for 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 10.50 p. m.

During the recess the following proceedings occurred:

Mr. CANNON. I move that Representative UNDERWOOD preside over this meeting.

Mr. CARLIN. Unless there is objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Without objection, it is agreed to. [Applause.]

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD assumed the chair and was greeted with general applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole House will come to order.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the closing hours of the Sixty-second Congress are upon us. During the almost continuous session of this Congress we have had many sharp contests, sharp attacks on the part of the majority upon the alleged former record of the gentlemen who represent the minority, and under the leadership of the Republican minority leader we have defended, attacked, and flanked, to the best of our ability, the majority; and I want to say that all of us, according to our convictions and our party alliances, have done our duty in the Congress as we have seen our duty under our responsibility to our constituents. [Applause.] And after 16 years of power by the Republican Party, a constitutional majority having given our Democratic friends full power—President after to-morrow noon, House, Senate [applause]—with that full power comes full responsibility.

Our minority leader has met the approval of the minority, and, in all matters save partisan matters, I believe he has met the approval of the majority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Speaking with almost 40 years of service in the National House of Representatives, I think I can say, and truly say, that in all that time, during more than a generation, no man has served in this House, upon either side, who by his industry, by his intelligence, by his courage, all the while upon the firing line, has been as competent a legislator as the minority leader of the House. [Applause.]

The world respects in an opponent fidelity to principle, whether it agrees with the opponent or not. So in this House and in the country there is not only respect for his industry and intelligence, but respect for his courage as well. It takes many different attributes to make an efficient legislator—intelligence to know what to do, discretion as to when to do it, courage to follow his convictions. These attributes are prime factors, especially for a man who is a leader upon the majority or the minority side of the House. Possessing as he does the confidence of the Republican minority we have felt that at this time, at the close of this session, we would ask the majority to unite with us in pausing a sufficient length of time to enable us to testify our appreciation of our minority leader; and it gives me great pleasure, Representative MANN, to hand you a timepiece, a stop watch [laughter and applause]—when you touch the spring—and it is sometimes necessary to stop. It is also a watch that strikes the seconds and the minutes and the hours when you touch a spring, and it is important to touch it when it is time to stop. But this watch, when you touch the spring again, will tell you when to start. [Laughter and applause.]

And in conclusion I give you, in the presence of the majority and the minority this testimonial to your efficiency as a party leader, to your ability as a legislator. And while at times you have received criticism of individuals upon each side of the House, perchance at times as being captious, yet I notice that during this Congress, when you come to the details of legislation, you have been not only a leader of the minority, but have in all matters not partisan given suggestion, upon application, to Members of the majority. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make no point of order, and I do not reserve the right to object. [Laughter.] I had almost come to believe that few things could be presented to the House for consideration without my at least having a presentiment of what was coming. I am both surprised, pleased, and touched. For many years I have been able to carry a dollar watch, and now during the remainder of my life my proudest personal possession will be this watch which has been so graciously presented to me.

I am not entirely devoid of knowledge of my many shortcomings, and hence I appreciate more than others this kindness on the part of my friends in the House.

Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored to be a faithful leader of the minority and a faithful and industrious Member of the House. I hope that now and in the future I, with others, will be able to place country above party, and the blessings for all above partisan advantage to some. [Applause.]

As I have progressed along in the House there has been no one thing which has come to me more clearly than the knowledge that while we meet on opposite sides of the main aisle, representing different parties and different principles of economy, and, in part, of government, there remains in this House, as elsewhere, as the saving grace of our Republic and our civilization the possibility and the practicability of remaining friends while we fight over principles. [Applause.]

The chairman who presides on this occasion, the leader of the majority [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is a man whom we are all proud of [applause] and for whom we all entertain a warm affection; and the friendships on the two sides of the aisle, heart touching heart and hand clasping hand will retain for the American Republic the power to settle disputes at the ballot and by reason, and never again by force.

I extend my warmest appreciation to the friends who have been so kind to me, hoping that I may be able in a weak way to make up for it to many of them—in some other way than by agreeing to pass their bills. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama). The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think the most appropriate gift that was ever conferred upon any man, especially upon our distinguished friend, the Hon. JAMES R. MANN, is a stop watch. [Laughter and applause.] I wish to join in all the nice things that have been said about him. As the last session was closing I stated on the floor of the House that no majority in the history of the American Congress had ever been more ably led than the Democratic majority in this House by the gentleman now presiding [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. [Applause.]

I also stated that no minority in the history of the Government had ever been more splendidly led than the Republican minority in this House by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.] I repeat those statements here to-night, as the Congress is nearing its end.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is a great puzzle to me. I spend a good deal of time sitting up in the Speaker's chair, when Members are making speeches, in studying the talents, the capacity, the skill, the idiosyncrasies of various Members, and it is a delightful study. "The proper study of mankind is man." I say without any qualification whatever that Brother MANN is the most industrious, indefatigable human being that I ever clapped my eyes on. [Applause.] How he learns all he knows about these bills is an impenetrable mystery to me, and I do not believe that any being in the universe, except Brother MANN, his secretary, and God Almighty Himself, know. [Laughter and applause.]

I need not say that I have great personal affection for the gentleman from Illinois, and great admiration for him. Everybody knows that.

The Speaker has important functions to perform, the majority leader has, and the minority leader has. In fact, all of us have, if we would attend to them. [Laughter.] But the Speaker, the majority leader, and the minority leader are not the whole show, neither are all the Members put together. There are certain employees of this House who are as indispensable to its proceedings as the Speaker, the majority leader, or the minority leader. And they do not get into the limelight much, as the rest of us do when we try right hard.

Among these employees, invaluable not only to the Speaker but to the membership of the House, is the Speaker's parliamentary clerk. [Applause.] I recently stated in a magazine article that if the Hon. ASHER C. HINDS, who discharged the duties of that place with such distinguished success and ability under three Speakers, had not been elected to Congress I would have unhesitatingly reappointed him to that place, notwithstanding he is a staunch Republican. [Applause.] The truth is, when I got to looking around for a parliamentary clerk, for some Democrat somewhere who had had something to do with the rules of this House, it was extremely difficult to find one.

When I first came to Congress the present parliamentary clerk was parliamentary clerk for his father, one of my distinguished predecessors, the Hon. Charles Frederick Crisp. [Applause.] I had not seen Charlie Crisp for 20 years, but I inquired how he had developed mentally, about his character and about his habits, and I found that he was all right in every regard, and I appointed him to the place, taking him greatly by surprise, and the universal testimony of the Members of this House is that he has discharged the difficult, multifarious, and delicate duties of that position with great success and unfailing courtesy. [Applause.]

The world at large knows him as Judge Charles R. Crisp, but every Member of this body knows him as Charlie Crisp. [Applause.] When Gen. Lee heard that Stonewall Jackson was dead he said, "I have lost my right arm"; and I feel a good deal that way, knowing that Judge Crisp becomes a Congressman to-morrow.

It is a suggestive thing that ASHER C. HINDS graduated from that position into the membership of this House, and Charlie Crisp has done the same thing. [Applause.]

Now, on behalf of the Members, without respect to politics, and in their name, I present to him these magnificent silver articles. [Applause.] May their brightness ever keep us bright in his memory, and may his success in life be as durable and brilliant as the metal of which they are made. [Great applause.]

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, my honored and esteemed friends, it rarely happens that at times one is met with an unlooked-for and unexpected kindness that so completely fills the soul with love and gratitude that he can not find words to express his feelings. That is my condition to-night.

When I accepted the position of parliamentarian under the Speaker I realized that I had been away from Washington a great many years, and I knew my weaknesses. I entered into the discharge of the duties with fear and trembling, but the membership of this House was universally kind to me, and I have often said that some of the very best friends I had in this House were on the Republican side. [Applause.]

I have done my best, gentlemen. [Applause.] I have made mistakes, but they were honest ones, and I was looking forward to the time to come when I could lay down the onerous and exacting duties of the position; but since you have so generously treated me, when I behold this beautiful present, evidencing your friendship and esteem, I shall have nothing but the happiest recollections of my service as parliamentarian during this Congress.

I believe, gentlemen, in a Divine Creator, and that when life's short career here is ended there is a life beyond, and I believe that all loved ones know things that transpire here. [Applause.] I have a beloved mother and an idolized father on the other shore, and that father spent many years in this Hall. I know if it is possible for those in the other world to know what is transpiring here, your generous act has given pleasure in heaven as well as in this world. [Applause.]

I have never had an heirloom, but I have now a beautiful and priceless one, that shall be cherished as long as memory lasts. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Applause.]

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, at 10.50 o'clock p. m. the House resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make two announcements. One is that everybody not entitled to the floor must leave the Hall, and the second one is to request Members to remain in their places until we get through with the business of the House to-night. It is necessary to have a quorum here, and the Speaker now recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings just had during the recess be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 25781. An act to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911."

CHARLES DUDLEY DALY.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 7747) for the relief of Charles Dudley Daly, and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to suspend the rules, take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 7747, and pass the same. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States, in his discretion, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Charles Dudley Daly to the grade of first lieutenant of Field Artillery, United States Army, to take rank on the list of first lieutenants of Field Artillery next after the name of Charles P. Hollingsworth, and that no back pay or allowances shall accrue as a result of the passage of this act, and there shall be no increase in the total number of officers now authorized by law by reason of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the bill which I have just moved to take from the Speaker's table is to reinstate in the Army Charles Dudley Daly. A similar bill is on the House Calendar, and which has been favorably reported by the House Committee on Military Affairs after a hearing. The bill which is now before us was reported favorably in the Senate and has passed that body. It is now on the Speaker's table awaiting action by this body. Mr. Daly is a graduate of Harvard College. He entered West Point and graduated with a very excellent position in his class. He then entered the Army, and after serving a short time, because of family and private reasons that were imperative, resigned. He has now been six years out of the Army, and this bill seeks to reinstate him, not in the position which he would have occupied had he not resigned but at the foot of the list of first lieutenants, which involves a loss to him in position of about 1,000 numbers. Mr. Daly, since he left the Army, has made a most creditable record. First in business, and then as fire commissioner of the city of Boston he showed high efficiency and the best attributes of firmness and character. He was educated, as I say, at the Military Academy at West Point, and is excellently qualified to render to our country the best of service as an officer. We need educated graduates of West Point in the Army. Here is one so anxious to return that he accepts a position at the foot of the list of first lieutenants, many years in promotion behind the men with whom he was serving at the time that he resigned. His continued service is deemed for the benefit of the military establishment of the country by all of the men who have heard the evidence before the committees, both of the Senate and the House.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. When did he graduate?

Mr. PETERS. In 1905. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McClintock, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill H. R. 25781, an act to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911."

LIEN FOR DELINQUENT TAXES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 25780) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. I will state that there is no statement of the managers and will ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the conference report as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 25780) to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "situated," at the end of the bill as it was passed by the Senate, add the following proviso: "Provided further, That whenever any State, by appropriate legislation, authorizes the filing of such notice in the office of the registrar or recorder of deeds of the counties of that State, or in the State of Louisiana in the parishes thereof, then such lien shall not be valid in that State as against any mortgager, purchaser, or judgment creditor until such notice shall be filed in the office of the registrar or recorder of deeds of the county or counties, or parish or parishes in the State of Louisiana, within which the property subject to the lien is situated."

H. D. CLAYTON,
W. W. RUCKER,
JOHN A. STERLING,
Managers on the part of the House.

FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
ELIHU ROOT,
T. H. PAYNTER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 28812, H. Rept. 1618), together with a statement of the managers, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee submits a conference report on the naval appropriation bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee if this is a complete or a partial report?

Mr. PADGETT. It is a complete report on everything except the battleships and the amendments incident thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to reading the statement in lieu of the report?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement at length.

[For conference report, see Senate proceedings of March 3, 1913.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report, and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is going to move——

Mr. HOBSON. I was prepared to move that the House accept the Senate amendment for two battleships instead of one.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized to make the motion to concur in the Senate amendments which are in disagreement.

Mr. PADGETT. Senate amendment numbered 46?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, that is the motion which I have just made.

The SPEAKER. The practice is, the Chair will state to the gentleman, to recognize the leader on the minority of the committee.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. But, Mr. Speaker, some Members of the committee not of the minority are in favor of two battleships, and I am one.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can vote for it when the time comes.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I am going to do so.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments numbered 46, 47, 48, 49, 55, 56, and 57. These amendments relate to the subject of two battleships, and I move that the House recede from its disagreement to those amendments and concur in the same. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to know how much time I have.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, would not my colleague make a motion to concur in one amendment? It will have to be divided, anyhow, and that will make a test vote.

Mr. FOSS. The amendments I have enumerated relate to two battleships entirely and they should be all voted upon, in my judgment, at once.

Mr. MANN. They will have to be voted upon separately anyhow, because I shall demand a division of the question. Now the test vote is on one or two battleships; the other, whichever it is, follows that.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman is going to demand a division, then for the sake of economizing as to time I will make my motion to recede from the disagreement and concur in Senate amendments Nos. 46 and 48.

Mr. GARNER. Amendment No. 46 is enough.

Mr. FOSS. Well, 46.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 46 and concur therein.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve my time with this limitation, that I think one hour's debate upon this will be sufficient, and I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

Mr. MANN. Can not we get an agreement to that effect?

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman I hardly think we will use that time.

Mr. GARNER. Twenty minutes on a side is enough; everybody understands the question.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman agree, then, to 10 minutes on a side?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no. [Cries of "Vote!"] Yield me 30 minutes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, the House seems ready to vote; let us vote on it.

Mr. FOSS. I think the gentleman ought to yield me 15 minutes anyhow.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, I will yield the gentleman 15 minutes.

RETURN OF A BILL TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Speaker to lay the request before the House which has just come from the Senate.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 25781) an act to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 27148) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, when the House passed this bill it provided for one battleship. The vote upon the question as between one and two battleships was very close. It stood 174 to 156. In other words, by a bare majority of 18 we placed in the bill an authorization for one battleship. Then the bill went over to the Senate and the Senate amended it by increasing the number of battleships to two, and that is the Senate amendment which appears here in the bill and in which the House is asked to concur. I may say to the Members of the House that the vote in the Senate was a very decisive one, being 56 to 16—more than 3 to 1—a majority of 40, and the Senate is very insistent upon the authorization of two battleships. While I do not wish to state that this bill will fail unless we get two battleships, yet I wish to state to the House frankly and in all candor that the Senate is very insistent upon this proposition.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we ought to continue the policy of building up the Navy as we have done in the past. Until this Congress came into session, for a number of years we authorized two battleships a year, and, reaching back over the number of years during which I have served in this House—about eighteen—we have authorized on the average nearly two battleships a year—31 battleships, if I remember rightly, during the last 16 years. If we concur in this amendment, we will only continue the policy which has been adopted and approved in this country, of two ships a year. To my mind, the authorization of one ship is a backward step in the maintenance of a strong and adequate naval policy for our country. I believe that the American people will approve of the continuance of this policy of two battleships a year. [Applause.]

Our interests on this hemisphere and on the other are great, and it ill becomes our country at this time to go back upon its naval policy. The Democratic Party in its platform declared in favor of an adequate Navy, and yet when this measure was up before the House 46 Members, and all of them on that side of the aisle, voted against any battleships whatever.

Is that in line with the policy in your platform adopted in the last national convention? And upon the vote for only one battleship there were 174 Members—all of them, in fact, except a comparatively few Members from this side—who voted for simply one ship. Now you have an opportunity, backed up by the insistence of the other body, a coordinate body of this Congress, to vote upon this proposition anew, and I trust that we will concur in the Senate amendments.

Now, Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used five minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, at this late hour I should not have trespassed upon the time of this House to favor two battleships if, in the various debates concerning this question, the reason for my vote had been given. The controlling consideration of whether we should have two battleships or one is not dollars and cents. It is a question of whether or not the ruling power of this country, or that which will be the ruling power of this Government to-morrow, shall live up to the responsibility it has assumed. I, in common with perhaps every man on the floor of this House, would be pleased to see the necessity for battleships absolutely removed. The hammers and forges of the world, busy in the construction of battleships, know no sunrise, sunset, or midnight. It is a sound of preparation in every quarter of the globe. It was thought that America would and could take the lead in disarmament. The President of the United States, whose term expires to-morrow, negotiated treaties with the great powers of the earth looking toward this precise end; that is, the removal of the necessity for the construction of battleships. The treaty-ratifying power is at the other end of this Capitol Building, and as that body was constituted during the last year neither party was in control, because it took two-thirds to adopt or ratify a treaty.

Those treaties, which if put into effect by the Senate of the United States would have given the other side of this House an excuse for opposing the construction of battleships, were emasculated and their effectiveness absolutely averted and destroyed, and the other high contracting powers would not agree to the emasculated agreement. These amendments were not made by the votes of those who supported the President of the United States, but by the votes of the side of the House which upon to-morrow will assume control of the affairs of this Government.

Two important amendments were used for the purpose of defeating those treaties. One was known as the Bacon amendment. The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That the Senate advises and consents to the ratification of the said treaty with the understanding, to be made a part of such ratification, that the treaty does not authorize the submission to arbitration of any question which affects the admission of aliens into the United States, or the admission of aliens to the educational institutions of the several States, or the territorial integrity of the several States or of the United States, or concerning the question of the alleged indebtedness or moneyed obligations of any State of the United States, or any question which depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe doctrine, or other purely governmental policy.

For the Bacon amendment 7 Republicans voted and 39 Democrats, while 36 Republicans and no Democrats voted against the Bacon amendment. The committee amendment, which proposed to strike out the third paragraph of article 3, is as follows:

It is further agreed, however, that in cases in which the parties disagree as to whether or not a difference is subject to arbitration under article 1 of this treaty, that question shall be submitted to the joint high commission of inquiry; and if all or all but one of the members of the commission agree and report that such difference is within the scope of article 1, it shall be referred to arbitration in accordance with the provision of this treaty—

For this amendment, 36 Democrats and 6 Republicans; against the amendment, 3 Democrats and 37 Republicans. So that from the members of the party which to-morrow will assume the control of the affairs of this Government, when the President of the United States said, "We desire to remove the necessity for the construction of battleships by entering into treaties of peace with the great battleship-making powers of the earth," came the vote that emasculated those treaties and prevented their effective adoption. It came as a challenge to the world—"We are ready to fight." You gave the "defi" to the battleship countries of the world, and you would better not bluff. You would better prepare to make good.

That is the reason why I vote for two battleships, and because we, through your action, gave the "defi." If we have not a substantial navy when that "defi" is accepted, by whatever power on earth sees fit to accept it, then our Navy will be passed, our shores will be reached, and our battles must be fought by our young men, the volunteer soldiery of the United States; and when foreign enemies approach us, however superior we may be, our loss in land battle will be great. If our battles be fought on the sea, it will be largely by the professional warriors; the result will be swift and decisive; while if we fight on land, fighting will be done by our sons drawn from our homes. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, you will find that battleships are cheaper than boys. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] is recognized for five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. GREGG of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to discuss the question of one or two battleships. This House had that thoroughly discussed less than a week ago, and if the Members did not have sense enough to understand it then, I do not think we could make them understand it now.

I did not sign this partial report, and I want to tell this House why I did not. If the Senate had adopted some amendments that involved a change or a modification or a qualification of some provision in our bill upon which we had not voted, then I would have been perfectly willing to come back and submit to this House the question as to whether they were willing to accept those changes, modifications, or qualifications. But this proposition was not put to us in that shape. The Senate conferees said to us: "It is true that less than one week ago you voted for one battleship; but go back; go back and ask the House if it really meant what it said. Go back and ask the House whether its Members have got the backbone and the stamina to stand by the solemn declaration made less than one week ago."

I felt that to come back to this House with such a proposition was an insult to you and an insult to your intelligence, and as your agent—because the conferee representing the House is your agent—I was not willing to fling such an insult in your face.

I have been on two conferences on the naval appropriation bill, and——

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. GREGG of Texas. No, sir; I have but five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I will state that at the last session of Congress——

Mr. GREGG of Texas. I was coming to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. I have been on two conferences, representing this House, and I want to say to you that in neither of those conferences have the conferees of the House been in position to treat on equal terms with the Senate conferees. One year ago the House voted to have no battleships. When we went to confer, what did we meet? Why, the Senate conferees told us that Members of the House had been there and had told them to stand firm; that the House would repudiate its own action. How could we treat on equal terms with Senate conferees under those conditions? And again, this time, after we voted, after nine hours' debate, for one battleship, when we go into conference the Senate conferees tell us, "Oh, the Members of the House have been over here, and they have told us that if we just stand firm the conferees would make a partial report," and that the House would overrule its action of less than a week ago, when it voted for one and against two battleships.

Now, Mr. Speaker, does that speak for the standard of this House? Oh, it seems strange to me that we can never get involved in a question of battleships but that there is treachery in the House to the House itself. [Applause and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. I understand an effort is going to be made to have this appear as a party question and a party issue. And I desire to make my protest. When the question arose as to the pension bill it was not made a party question. The majority leader did not raise his voice when the pension appropriations leaped up beyond the Republican record by $30,000,000. That bill entailed a greater increase in the yearly appropriations than would be required for two battleships. In the matter of the public buildings bill, the rivers and harbors bill, and other great supply bills that have come up, not one has been made a party question, and against none of them did the majority leader raise his voice. Our party leader says he voted against that. Yes. I ask him now to vote against this bill, but not to raise his voice as the party leader against this proposition for one more battleship.

Mr. Speaker, a one-battleship program will, by 1920, make this country the sixth naval power in the world. Two battleships a year, by 1916, will make America the fourth naval power in the world. If we simply write off 10 per cent for depreciation, which every careful management would do in a manufacturing establishment, two and one-half battleships a year would be required to keep us even.

Two battleships a year does not make up for the tonnage that should be retired every year. We are now compelled to retain in commission old battleships fitted only for the second line because of our lack of Dreadnoughts. Here at the end of this Congress, when we have already opened wide the door of the Treasury and appropriated over $1,100,000,000 without protest on the floor of the House by the majority leader, we are told that the naval program must be sacrificed in the interest of economy. In the name of a false economy we are called on to sacrifice the integrity of the Navy, the bulwarks of our national defense, upon which depend our sovereignty over the Panama Canal, the Monroe doctrine, the open-door policy, and all the great foreign policies of the Nation, our peace, while peace is possible, and victory if war must come. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. The occupants of the galleries are admonished that they are here by the courtesy of the House. Applauding is strictly forbidden, and if there is any more of it the Chair will have the galleries cleared. [Applause on the floor.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, during all the time in which the party on this side of the House was in power—for 16 years—the naval program was never made a party question. It was never taken into a party caucus, and I appeal to men here upon both sides of this House that national defense is above all parties, and I call upon you, one and all, on this occasion to raise the flag of country higher than the banner of party and to vote for the national defense and the national honor. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. HOBSON] seeks to create the impression that I desire to make this a party question. I do not. I desire to make it an American question. [Applause.] I do not believe in parsimony. I never contend for cheeseparing; but the membership of this House owe a great responsibility to the American people, to transact their business with honest and efficient economy. [Applause.] The appropriation bills have drifted beyond the ken of man in the last decade. I do not blame individuals. I do not blame committees. We have a system of legislation that is largely responsible for it, and I hope my party in the coming administration will face that fact fairly and honestly and write on the statute books a system by which we can in the future appropriate with economy and efficiency at the same time. [Applause.]

I would not stand here to-night to take your time or ask your consideration if the only question involved was the question of whether you would appropriate for one battleship or two battleships; but the issue goes beyond that. This bill, if agreed to as it now stands, without adding another battleship, carries $140,700,000. My friends on both sides of this House, let me call your attention to the fact that never in the history of the Republican Party has it brought in a naval bill that exceeded $136,000,000. What have been the appropriations for the maintenance of the Navy in the last five years? Five years ago the naval appropriation bill carried $122,000,000; four years ago $136,000,000; three years ago $131,000,000; two years ago $126,000,000; and last year $123,000,000; an average of a little over $127,000,000, or less than $128,000,000 in the last five years is your record. We bring in a bill here to-night, and I do not intend to attempt to escape our responsibility for it. It is our bill. It appropriates $140,000,000, or $12,000,000 more than the average amount of the bills brought into this House by Republican Congresses to support the Navy in the last five years.

Now, it is not a question of battleships, my colleagues. Can any man on the floor of this House say that this House has not made ample appropriations for a Navy—ample appropriations? [Applause.] What difference does it make whether it is a battleship or a torpedo boat? This money is offered for national defense—$12,000,000 more than the average of the last five years.

Now, whether you are for one battleship or whether you are for two, I ask you, with these figures staring you in the face, do you think it is just to your constituents to add another battleship that in the end will add $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 to the appropriations already agreed to here to-night?

Ah, the gentleman from Illinois says he appeals to the American flag, to the American sentiment. My friends, the gentleman from Illinois may appeal to the sentiment of war, but I appeal to the sentiment of peace. [Applause.]

This great country of ours, when we faced a national war in the time of the Spanish War, was appropriating only $30,000,000 for the Navy, and our flag did not come down. [Applause.] I say to the gentleman from Illinois that the great bulwark of defense that protects the American people from foreign invasion, that demands respect of the American citizen on foreign soil, are not the guns of the Army and the Navy, but the great genius, spirit, courage, and manhood of the American citizenship. [Applause.] It is not necessary for you to go into continued extravagance in order that you may protect the flag or the honor of your country. I say to you that a new administration is coming into power. With less than half of the British Navy we are approaching the English expenditure for maintenance. I say to you that with this naval expenditure—I do not charge corruption, because I know corruption does not exist—but I do charge the fact that the men that administer the appropriations we give them are not administering them with economy and efficiency, and I say the time has come for us to halt, to give the new administration an opportunity to examine this system. [Applause.]

I say to you, my colleagues, that whether you were for two battleships or one battleship in the past it is not that issue now. The day has come, the hour has come, when you ought in justice to your constituents and in justice to the American people at this time not to stir one foot beyond $140,000,000 that we give in this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment 46 and concur in the same.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. An "aye" vote means two battleships and a "no" vote means one. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were yeas 144; nays 168; answered "present" 3; not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—144.

So the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. MORRISON with Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. SULLOWAY.

Mr. MOORE of Texas with Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee with Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan.

Mr. PUJO with Mr. MCCREARY.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. STACK with Mr. MCKINNEY.

Mr. LINDSAY with Mr. SLEMP.

On this vote:

Mr. HINDS (for two battleships) with Mr. HARDWICK (for one battleship).

Mr. LANGHAM (for two battleships) with Mr. MADDEN (for one battleship).

Mr. WILDER (for two battleships) with Mr. SWEET (for one battleship).

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, I voted "nay." I desire to withdraw my vote and vote "present," as I am paired with the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY].

The name of Mr. BOOHER was called and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to all the amendments not embraced in the report and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. PADGETT, Mr. GREGG of Texas, and Mr. FOSS.

EMPLOYMENT OF EXPERTS, COMMITTEE ON JUDICIARY, SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 73.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the managers on the part of the two Houses be authorized and directed to insert in H. R. 28,858, an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for prior years, and for other purposes, the following:

"After March 4, 1913, those members of the Committee on the Judiciary who are Members-elect of the House to the Sixty-third Congress, or a majority of them, until the meeting of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, and the Committee on the Judiciary, during the first session of that Congress are authorized to expend for experts, accountants, and clerical and other assistants, for the purposes stated in House resolution number 486, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum not in excess of the balance unexpended under said resolution."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 28812) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, numbered 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. LODGE, and Mr. THORNTON as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 28775), and ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the statement in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1627).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 8, 9, 16, 20, 21, 22, 23, 28, 50, 55, 58, 59, 62, 63, 67, 83, 84, 101, and 103.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 19, 47, 68, 70, 71, 94, 95, 96, 100, 102, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$75,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 57, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,305,520"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 64, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and in lieu of the sum proposed insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to grant a lease for the construction and maintenance of a substantial hotel and buildings in connection therewith in accordance with and under the provisions of the act of June 4, 1906 (34 Stat. L., p. 207), relating to concessions in Yellowstone National Park, and the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stat. L., p. 1219), amendatory thereof, and any part of section 2 of the act of October 1, 1890, concerning the Yosemite National Park, in conflict herewith is hereby repealed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$125,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 72, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 129, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"To provide for the participtation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

"There shall be exhibited at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, to be held at San Francisco in 1915, such articles and materials as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government of the United States tending to demonstrate the nature and growth of our institutions, their adaptation to the wants of the people, and the progress of the Nation in the arts of peace and war; and the President is authorized to provide for the collection and exhibition of such articles and materials under the direction of a board, which is hereby created, to be known as the Government Exhibit Board, which shall be composed of three members, to be named by the President from persons in the executive departments, who after consultation with the heads of the executive departments and the regents of the Smithsonian Institution, the Isthmian Canal Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Service Commission, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the American National Red Cross, the Commission of Fine Arts, the Librarian of Congress, the Public Printer, the governor of Porto Rico, the governor of Alaska, the governor of Hawaii, and the United States Geographic Board, shall determine the nature, character, and extent of the exhibits to be made, and shall be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, safe-keeping, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials as said board may decide shall be exhibited. Before any obligations are incurred of any nature said board shall have arranged the scope of such exhibits so as to provide for the collection, exhibition, and return of such articles and materials at a cost, which, together with all other expenses herein authorized, shall not exceed the amount hereinafter appropriated. The President shall designate one member of said board as chairman, and from persons in the employ of the United States Government may designate a secretary and a disbursing officer for said board, and may also detail such other persons, including officers of the Army and Navy, as he may deem necessary to assist said board. All officers and employees of the Government who may be detailed as aforesaid shall receive no compensation in addition to their regular salaries, but shall be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses, together with a per diem in lieu of subsistence, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, but in no case to exceed $5 per day while necessarily absent from their homes engaged upon the business of the board. Any officer of the Army or Navy so detailed shall receive this allowance in lieu of the transportation and mileage now allowed him by law. Any provision of law which may prohibit the detail of persons in the employ of the United States to other service than that which they customarily perform, shall not apply to persons detailed to duty in connection with said Panama-Pacific International Exposition. Employees of the board not otherwise employed by the Government shall be entitled to such compensation as the board may determine: Provided, That compensation shall not be paid to any such employee at a rate in excess of $3,000 per annum. The disbursing officer shall give bond in the sum of $30,000 for the faithful performance of his duties, said bond to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury shall advance to said officer, from time to time, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, a sum of money from the appropriation herein made for the governmental participation in the exposition, not exceeding at any one time the penalty of his bond, to enable him to pay the expenses of exhibition as authorized by the exhibit board.

"Suitable buildings for the housing of all said exhibits shall be provided by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co. without expense of any kind to the Government of the United States.

"For the purpose of inaugurating, installing, maintaining, and returning said Government exhibits, together with all other expenses of every kind connected therewith, $500,000. Said sum shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury from time to time under such regulations as he may prescribe.

"The President of the United States is authorized to detail three civilian officers or employees from the executive departments as members of a commission, which is hereby constituted as the National Exposition Commission; one of said commissioners, who shall be the chairman of said commission, shall be detailed from the Department of State. Vacancies in said commission shall be filled in the same manner as original appointments. Each commissioner shall receive, in addition to his original compensation, his actual necessary traveling expenses and an allowance of $10 per day in lieu of subsistence. Said commissioners may appoint a secretary, at $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for clerical, office, and other necessary and actual expenses of said commission.

"Said commission shall be authorized and empowered to act as a board of arbitration to settle and determine any and all disputes arising between the commissioners of foreign Governments and the directors of said Panama-Pacific International Exposition whenever a formal request for such action is made by any foreign commissioner, and said National Exposition Commission shall represent the Government of the United States at said exposition in the reception and care of persons officially representing foreign Governments.

"Said National Exposition Commissioners shall be detailed not earlier than July 1, 1914, and their term of service as said commissioners shall not extend beyond July 1, 1916, and the President may terminate said commission at any time after January 1, 1916."

And the Senate agree to the same.

On amendment numbered 130 the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.
F. E. WARREN,
GEORGE C. PERKINS,
B. R. TILLMAN.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is a complete report of the conferees on the sundry civil appropriation bill, with the exception of one item. There is still in disagreement the item for the Knoxville Exposition. That involves $250,000. Exclusive of the $250,000, the bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $116,718,386.91. This is $2,804,614 less than as it passed the Senate and $3,554,766.25 greater than as it passed the House. It shows a reduction of $22,072,248.07 under the estimates considered by the Committee on Appropriations in its preparation, and it is a reduction of $1,408,593.05 under like appropriations for the current fiscal year, including in that sum the transfer of $6,087,798.50 from the permanent and other appropriations provided for in this bill. So that, Mr. Speaker, while this bill carried last year $43,000,000 less than the estimates and $33,000,000 less than for the fiscal year 1912, this bill is $1,400,000 less than the current law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New York just what is the agreement on the San Francisco Exposition?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the California Exposition matter the conferees provided that there should be appointed a Government exhibit board, consisting of three persons from the executive departments of the Government, who, after conference with the various departments and other independent services, should determine the character, nature, and extent of the exhibits to be made by the Government, and should have charge of them. They are to plan in advance the entire cost and scheme of the exhibit and so arrange it that all of its expenses shall be within the $500,000 appropriated.

Provision is made requiring the exposition company to provide a building or buildings without expense to the United States for the exhibit which is to be made by the United States. A national exposition board is created, to be appointed by the President, consisting of one civilian officer or employee from the State Department, who is to be chairman of the commission, and two other civilian officers or employees from other executive departments, who are to be a board of arbitration. No employees are to be allowed compensation in excess of the salaries of the positions which they occupy or will occupy when appointed. Members of the national exhibit board are to be allowed actual and necessary traveling expenses and not to exceed $5 per diem in lieu of subsistence when necessarily absent from their homes on the business of the board, and members of the national commission—the arbitration board—are to be allowed no compensation in excess of the compensation of the positions which they hold in the Government, but are to be allowed their actual and necessary traveling expenses of $10 a day in lieu of subsistence.

The commission is not to be appointed earlier than the 1st of July, 1914, and it must expire by the 1st of July, 1916. Fifteen thousand dollars is appropriated to be expended by this commission to cover all of its expenses. The managers on the part of the House in the preparation of this item in cooperation with the Senate managers also had in conference some of the Members of the Senate who are particularly familiar with these matters. I refer especially to Senator ROOT, who as Secretary of State had considerable experience with these expositions, who is chairman of the committee which has jurisdiction of them in the Senate, who served as Secretary of War; he has acquiesced in the provisions incorporated in the bill for this purpose.

Mr. Chairman, one item remains in dispute. The Senate inserted an item appropriating $250,000 for the National Conservation Commission, at Knoxville, Tenn. Despite what anyone may say, it is a purely local exposition. Some persons in the Senate seem to imagine that this House in the closing days of this session would be so carried away with enthusiasm for such a project that if given the opportunity they would agree to this item. Conceding the right of the House to act as it pleases, and having unquestioned confidence in its good judgment and sound patriotism, the managers upon the part of the House agreed to bring this item back to test the sense of the House. I propose at the proper time to move to adhere to the disagreement of the House on this amendment. [Applause.] I have the assurance if the House takes this action it will close this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a resolution——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just a moment; the time has not come yet for the gentleman to do that. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], one of the managers on the part of the House, has not signed the report. Before the vote is taken upon agreeing to the report, after which will come up the matter in which the gentleman from Tennessee is interested, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] desires to be heard on the report. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois, and I hope that will be sufficient.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to have 15 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Senate is waiting for the gentleman from Illinois and myself. I hope we will finish to-night. I will give him 10 minutes, and if he really desires the other 5 I will give it to him.

[Mr. CANNON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. KENT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. KENT. I wanted to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not be recognized now, because the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has the floor.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says that if he were President of the United States he would not pass this bill because of two amendments placed on the bill in the House and agreed to by the Senate and which were not in conference. When those amendments were proposed in this House I did not vote for them, and I did not then and I do not now approve them. But to say they constitute a reason for vetoing this bill is to lose all sense of proportion in these closing hours of Congress. These amendments do not change the substantive law of the United States one iota. They simply provide that a given fund shall not be used for certain purposes. They do not restrict the use of other funds in the execution of the law, and they do not change the substantive law. And to say that a limitation put upon an expenditure of a fund for a given year is sufficient to veto a great supply bill of this Government is, as I say, to lose all sense of proportion.

The gentleman from Illinois also takes exception to the conference in regard to the Panama Exposition, and it is just possible that as human nature runs his objection to that may have encouraged him in his desire that the bill as a whole be vetoed.

We took the sense of this House touching what should be done as regards the Panama Exposition, and this House voted that there should be an appropriation not in excess of $500,000. Now, what we have done is this: To see to it that that $500,000 shall actually go for a true exhibit and none of it shall be squandered in providing soft berths for anybody in or out of Congress. [Applause.]

We have tied it so that there will be no excuse for a wrong expenditure, and we have provided as a first step that before any expenditure shall be had or liability be incurred there shall be provision made for such a scope of exhibit as could be properly taken care of and installed and returned, with all expenses incident thereto, for the sum of half a million dollars.

We provide for the Panama Exposition Co. to furnish the buildings. Is there inequity in that, when San Francisco came here and said not only that she would furnish the buildings, but that she would pay for the Government exhibit? Is it not fair to make her keep at least half her promise by providing her own buildings while we provide the exhibit?

We provide for the commissioners—no great, elaborate board, but three commissioners to constitute a board of control, and then three commissioners to pass upon the question of awards. These commisioners are to be chosen out of the officials in the departments and are to receive no extra compensation.

I say to you, gentlemen, that when you cut from under exposition bills the soft berths created by them, you will do more to stop the pressure for appropriations for expositions than by any other means.

And I want to say one other word, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. He says he is not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but if he were he would predict that within another Congress this appropriation will have to be added to by another. I want to say in behalf of myself and, as I believe, on behalf of the majority of this House, that if San Francisco comes again, asking, she will be turned away without consideration, as she ought to be turned away. [Applause.]

We have been liberal. Five hundred thousand dollars is enough to make a creditable exhibit, particularly when you cut off the perquisites and when you provide for the exposition company supplying the buildings. And I want this House to understand that in drawing the provisions touching this exhibit, your conferees have tried diligently and honestly to carry out the spirit and the letter of the instructions given them. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I merely desire the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk report Senate amendment numbered 130. Without reading it, inasmuch as it is quite lengthy, I may say that this is the amendment which provides for the so-called Nashville Exposition. I move that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 130.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to amendment numbered 130.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will read loud enough for the Members to hear.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman should send it to the desk and have it reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House conferees be instructed to yield on Senate amendment numbered 130, provided the amount be reduced from $250,000 to $200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. AUSTIN. Six minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order. The gentleman can move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is the quickest way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But as no conference has been asked, it is not in order to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is out of time. The motion for the gentleman to make is to concur.

Mr. AUSTIN. I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment that the amount shall not exceed $200,000.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to concur with an amendment that the amount shall not exceed $200,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. AUSTIN. Six minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will give him five.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to yield two minutes each to three gentlemen.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I will yield the other minute.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, this is an unexpected pleasure. I am heartily in favor of making this appropriation for the exposition at Knoxville, Tenn. The committee unanimously reported a bill for this purpose carrying $250,000. The sum of $50,000 will be stricken from that amount. The gentlemen in charge of this sundry civil appropriation bill have given to the San Francisco Exposition $500,000, and that is proper. It may be that they will need more than that. I am in favor of this proposition to hold an exposition at Knoxville to exhibit the products of improved farming and teach how to conserve the soil, and I trust that the gentleman from New York and those associated with him on this conference committee will not oppose this appropriation, for I believe that it will be of great value to the farmers of the South. I am heartily in favor of it, and I think it ought to be carried through. [Applause.]

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the subcommittee appointed by the chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions to go to Knoxville and look over this project. In my opinion it should commend itself to the sound judgment of this House. Two years ago Congress entered upon a policy known as the Appalachian conservation policy. When it was adopted by this Congress it had in view a great public purpose. Congress appropriated $11,000,000 to start that project on the part of this Government. Much of that sum has been expended in putting that policy in operation. It expected to derive a benefit from that policy. A part of that money has already been expended in carrying out the policy. It is therefore right and proper that Congress should take advantage of it and undertake to get the best benefits possible out of that project for the benefit of the American people. We ought to make every effort to get the best results possible out of this policy. If not, then the policy should be abandoned.

This exposition commends itself to the judgment of this House. It proposes to instruct the people upon this policy of conservation, so that they may derive benefit therefrom. I trust that this appropriation will be made, and that this exposition will be made a national success. This exposition is located in the heart of the territory included in the Appalachian system, and is the proper place for the education of the people in order that they may acquire all the advantages hoped to be attained from the adoption of the policy.

The territory surrounding Knoxville is rich in natural resources, and it is admirably adapted for the holding this great exposition. It is just recovering from the ravages of the great Civil War, which laid waste its factories and farms, and because of which it has been prevented from developing as its resources required, and now it is attracting attention, and we should stimulate that spirit and realize the value of these great possessions and aid the development of every part of our country for the general good of the public welfare. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] will be adopted.

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield two minutes to my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, as a general proposition I want to say frankly that I do not favor appropriations of this kind. But since the House has agreed to appropriate $500,000 for the exposition at San Francisco, in spite of the fact that the promise was made originally that no appropriation would be asked, I want to appeal to gentlemen upon this side of the Chamber in the spirit of fairness and equity and justice to pass the motion made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. [Applause.]

As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] has stated, a subcommittee of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions made a special trip to Knoxville for the purpose of looking into the advisability of making an appropriation of this kind. And I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that that subcommittee found that this was not a local exposition, as the gentleman stated, but an exposition in which a great many States are interested.

In conclusion, I wish to state another fact: The late Senator Robert L. Taylor, of Tennessee, introduced a bill for the purpose of providing an appropriation for the Knoxville Exposition. It was the very last bill that he introduced in the United States Senate, and I know that it was near and dear to his heart, and I hope that the Democrats on this side of the Chamber will join in passing the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN]. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen will read the amendment which the gentleman from Tennessee asks the House to concur in, they may perhaps be amazed at his temerity. It provides $100,000 for an exhibit and $150,000 for a public building. Whether he wishes the $50,000 cut out of the amount toward the exhibit so that only $50,000 will be available for the exhibit and $150,000 for the building, or whether he desires $50,000 cut off the building and $100,000 left for the exhibit, has not yet been indicated to anyone so far as I have been able to ascertain.

I received a letter from a resident of Knoxville, Tenn., in which he referred to the fact that I had interrogated the gentleman from Tennessee one day when the bill was up in the House, and he insisted that if Congress intended to erect a building at Knoxville for this exposition it at least should not be erected on the land now owned by the electric railway company, upon which the exposition property is now located. This bill provides that somebody or other shall donate a suitable site upon which to erect the buildings. The letter calls attention to the fact that the lease of this property for exposition purposes has only six years to run, and yet these gentlemen have recommended that Congress appropriate $150,000 for a permanent building for local annual expositions at Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. This matter was brought out in the hearings before the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and at the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] the manager and president of the traction company agreed to deed to the United States Government the land upon which this building was to be erected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. All right. The gentleman from Tennessee to-day said that if provision be made at the exposition at San Francisco equal treatment should be accorded to Tennessee. The House reduced the amount proposed, not by the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions in this House, for that was $2,000,000, but the amount proposed by the Senate, which was $1,500,000, to $500,000, and according to the mathematics of the gentleman from Tennessee equal justice would require, not an appropriation of one-third of the proposition made by the Senate for this exposition, but four-fifths of the appropriation proposed. I have no doubt that that ratio would be much more satisfactory.

Mr. AUSTIN. California said they didn't want any money and Tennessee didn't say so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I gave the gentleman from Tennessee all the time he requested and he has given it away and he ought not to attempt to intrude on my time. The exposition at San Francisco is on an entirely different plane from that of Knoxville. Congress has authorized the exposition and the President has issued an invitation to foreign nations to participate. Between seventeen and twenty million dollars have been raised by the people to conduct it. Some foreign nations have appropriated as much as $1,000,000 to participate in it. It is a farce, it is ridiculous, it is making a joke out of the proceedings of Congress to attempt to place the two expositions on the same plane.

Mr. Speaker, the House has successfully, and Congress has successfully and effectually, stopped these continual raids on the public Treasury in the interest of these public shows. Unless it intends to open the entire matter it should show its opposition at this time and stop now and for all time such appropriations. I hope the House will adhere to its disagreement and let this bill be enacted speedily into law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take much further time of this House on a matter of this kind. It is rather an extreme proposition that a great supply bill should have to come here with this the only item outstanding. As the gentleman from New York has said, it amounts to an absurdity to talk about a contribution of this size for an exposition of this sort, an exposition that is local to the immediate territory surrounding the place where it is held.

I have some southern pride, but, as I said earlier in the day, my southern pride prompts me against a raid on the Treasury, even for a southern institution. I hope that the Members on this side of the House will make the vote so pronounced that men over the country at large will understand that they can not get up these little expositions and come to Washington to get an appropriation to make them go financially.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to change my amendment so that it will read:

Not exceeding $100,000 for a building.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to change his amendment so that it will read:

Not exceeding $100,000 for a building.

Mr. AUSTIN. That would leave $200,000 the total amount—$100,000 for an exhibit and $100,000 for a building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that if this motion of the gentleman from Tennessee be adopted the amendment as it is now in the bill will have all of the offensive features which were cut out of the provision of the San Francisco provision, and they will be enacted into law.

Mr. AUSTIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no salary in this provision.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are a number of features that were eliminated from the California proposition that should be eliminated from this one.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I give my word and honor that that is not true.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I decline to yield. I do not wish to be discourteous.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee should not interrupt the gentleman from New York without first obtaining his consent.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, the gentleman ought not to make a misstatement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And the gentleman must not improperly characterize the statement which I make.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Tennessee on the one side ought to be permitted to have such time on his side as the gentleman from New York yields on his side.

Mr. SHERLEY. He has had.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let us have the amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I shall not yield to anybody at present until I have replied to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois. I asked the gentleman from Tennessee how much time he desired and he stated. I yielded to him that time, and he made no request for additional time. He should at least permit me to make my own statement in my own time. I have no desire to be unfair to the gentleman from Tennessee, but I should be permitted under the rules of the House to state for the benefit of the House the information which it is entitled to receive. I repeat what I was saying when the gentleman interrupted, that if his motion be adopted the amendment will not only be offensive because of what it proposes to do but because of the many indefensible provisions which are contained in it, somewhat similar to those which were eliminated from the provision for the San Francisco exposition.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were—ayes 71, noes 88.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-four Members are present—a quorum.

So the motion to recede and concur was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House adhere to its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman want a conference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON].

EMPLOYMENT OF EXPERTS, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY, SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk began the reading of the resolution.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Has not that resolution just been read?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it can be dispensed with, because it has been read.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to dispense with its reading. I join in the request of the gentleman. I thought other gentlemen might want the resolution read again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the resolution again. Is there objection——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if the purpose of this resolution is to permit the members of his committee who are reelected to the next Congress to pursue inquiries concerning antitrust and similar legislation between now and the assembling of the Sixty-third Congress?

Mr. CLAYTON. I may say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, that the purpose of this resolution is to authorize the Members elect to the Sixty-third Congress who are members of the Judiciary Committee to pursue the investigation of the so-called trust question, not only in the vacation, but after the Sixty-third Congress shall have assembled. It is particularly with that view, and the resolution is similar to the provision which has been carried in the deficiency bill in regard to two other committees conducting investigations for similar purposes.

Mr. MANN. My impression was that the deficiency bill did not provide or contemplate that the Ways and Means Committee or the District of Columbia Committee should be paid out of the contingent fund of the next House except so far as this legislation is concerned to meet the next House.

Mr. CLAYTON. My opinion is that the language employed in the pending resolution is similar, or as similar as it can be, to the other cases to which I have referred.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a report from the conference committee on the bill H. R. 28766, the omnibus public buildings bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire if this is a complete report?

Mr. BURNETT. It is a final report, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he will give a reasonable opportunity to discuss it if unanimous consent is given?

Mr. BURNETT. What time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. HARDWICK. A few minutes. I do not know how much, as I do not know what is in the report.

Mr. MANN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama if the papers are here? Has the matter been disposed of in the Senate?

Mr. BURNETT. I think so.

Mr. MANN. Who has the original papers?

Mr. BURNETT. We have the original papers; we agreed to the conference.

Mr. MANN. We asked for a conference.

Mr. BURNETT. No; the Senate asked for a further conference, and we agreed to it.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is not the way it was stated a while ago when the matter was up. It was stated we asked for a conference. I understand the conference report was up in the Senate a while ago.

Mr. BURNETT. I understood it was being discussed there, but I do not know anything about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland objects, and the Clerk will read the report.

Mr. BURNETT. All right.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1620).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings; and for other purposes; further reports that upon four amendments in dispute the Senate recede from its disagreement on Nos. 203, 217, and 218 and that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 241, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 25. That for the purpose of preventing the pollution and obstruction of Rock Creek and of connecting Potomac Park with the Zoological Park and Rock Creek Park a commission, to be composed of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such land and premises as are not now the property of the United States in the District of Columbia shown on the map on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia, dated May 17, 1911, and lying on both sides of Rock Creek, including such portion of the creek bed as may be in private ownership, between the Zoological Park and Potomac Park; and the sum of $1,300,000 is hereby authorized to be expended toward the acquirement of such land. That all lands now belonging to the United States or to the District of Columbia lying within the exterior boundaries of the land to be acquired by this act as shown are made a part of the parkway herein authorized to be acquired. One-half of the cost of the said lands shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States out of the revenues of the District of Columbia in eight equal annual installments, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum upon the deferred payments. That should the commission decide to institute condemnation proceedings in order to secure any or all of the land herein authorized to be acquired, such proceedings shall be in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 30, 1890, providing a site for the enlargement of the Government Printing Office (U. S. Stats. L., vol. 26, ch. 837)."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN L. BURNETT,
FRANK CLARK,
J. E. ANDRUS,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE SUTHERLAND,
F. E. WARREN,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

During the reading of the conference report the following proceedings occurred:

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Unless there is objection, the Chair will interrupt this reading to recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who comes back with a complete conference report. (H. R. 28812, H. Rept. 1624.)

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I yield just for that purpose and no other.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a complete conference report, together with a statement, and ask unanimous consent that the reading of both the report and the statement be omitted, for the reason that the Senate recedes altogether, and it is just one battleship. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OMNIBUS PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the conference report and statement.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

COAL LANDS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3843) granting to coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mining leases, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] calls up the conference report on the bill S. 3843, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 2 of the bill; and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House amending the title of the bill.

CHARLES D. CARTER,
CARL HAYDEN,
PHIL. CAMPBELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

MOSES E. CLAPP,
ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
ROBERT L. OWEN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28766) to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House H. R. 25781, an act to amend section 77 of "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Has any other gentleman a conference report? If not, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS].

CHARLES DUDLEY DALY.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, may I be informed as to how much time I have?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. PETERS. I suggest that others in opposition to the bill should consume some of their time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has 20 minutes, if he desires to use it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY].

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, the report in connection with the case of the reinstatement in the military service of Mr. Charles Dudley Daly states that his restoration is obviously for the good of the service. I appreciate how distasteful a task is imposed upon me in taking the position that I do in this matter, but I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I would be false to every principle that a man should owe to an institution that stands as high in the military world and that stands for so many excellent attributes as does our Military Academy at West Point if I should not do so.

West Point is recognized as an academy that ranks foremost among the military academies of the entire world. It is responsible for the production of the best product that is to be found in the world—men who possess principle, character, and manhood. The institution at West Point produced the two greatest soldiers of the last generation—one admired, loved, and venerated by the people of the South and respected by the entire people of this country, Gen. Robert E. Lee; the other, one of the greatest military characters in the great internecine struggle, Gen. Ulysses S. Grant.

I want to call to the attention of the Members of this House that no greater ignominy could be heaped on the character of men turned out by the West Point Military Academy than would be possible by restoring to the ranks Mr. Charles Dudley Daly. It has been pointed out that in private life he has been a success, that for 16 months he was the head of the Boston fire department, but it has not been correctly stated. He was a failure in private life and in business and in public office as fire commissioner of the city of Boston. The mayor of that city compelled him to tender his resignation in order to avoid the destruction of the efficiency of the fire department of the city of Boston. Is this House at this hour going to permit the restoration to the service of a man who lacks principle, who lacks character, and who lacks the greatest attribute of all, a humane spirit.

I want to direct to the attention of this House the case of a young man, a member of the fire department of Boston, who passed the necessary physical and mental requirements to secure an appointment under civil service in the fire department of that city.

There was a fire in 1912, in the month of December, a great conflagration, with the thermometer below zero, and this young man, exposed in the discharge of his duties, assigned by the commander of the department to watch the ruins of the fire, his clothing encased in ice, with the thermometer below zero, contracted pneumonia, which later developed into tuberculosis, and an effort was made to secure a pension that justice be done the man, and Daly responded by discharging the man from the service in violation of the civil-service requirements.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for three minutes more.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. CURLEY. An appeal was presented to the legislature in the nature of an enabling act, providing that on the adoption of that act and its acceptance by the council of Boston and approval by the mayor and fire commissioner the young man should be pensioned. The bill passed the legislature, passed the city council, and was approved by the mayor; but the fire commissioner, Mr. Daly, refused to approve of the measure. The young man died within two months, leaving an invalid mother with no support; and the general protest that arose from all sides was sufficiently powerful to compel the mayor of the city, rather than permit the disorganization of the fire service, to request Mr. Daly to tender his resignation.

Mr. Daly has been a failure in private life; he has been a failure in a public capacity; and if he has any of the elements that contribute to success, any of the elements that would be commendable in a man as an officer at West Point, it would not be necessary to conduct the lobby that has gone on for three months here in this city in order that he might be reinstated as an officer to command troops; a man who could not command the respect or confidence of the 700 members of the Boston fire department. What a spectacle! Men are solicited to vote because of their alma mater, because of fair Harvard, to reinstate Charlie Daly as a lieutenant at West Point; a man who was a failure in private life, a man who was a glaring failure in public life! I do not think this House will do any such thing. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] yield to his colleague?

Mr. FOSTER. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this man Daly was graduated from the Military Academy in the class of 1905, under a written pledge that he would serve in the Army for at least four or six years after his graduation. He tendered his resignation on May 11, 1906, within one year after his graduation. Since that time he has been in the banking business as a bond salesman and note broker in New York and Boston and did not succeed. He has been fire commissioner of the city of Boston, in which position he did not make a success. He is stated to be at present New England agent for the Atlantic Vehicle Co. He has changed his occupation four times since he left the Military Academy, and if placed in charge of Field Artillery would probably change his mind two or three times between sighting and firing a gun. [Laughter.] He has no qualifications for a position in the Army, except that he is reputed to have been the best football player that Harvard ever produced. [Applause.] That will not carry here, because, while that will deliver all the Harvard graduates on the floor of the House, they are not in a majority here.

There is no reason for reinstating Mr. Daly, and it will not be done without a quorum of the House present. A man who left the service just after he was graduated, violating a pledge which he had made to serve in the Army, and then went into one business, changed his mind immediately and went into another business, changed his mind almost immediately and went into still another business, and then was tendered at one time a reappointment in the Army, and between the time it was offered him and the time he could accept it changed his mind again and declined to go back into the Army, such a man, with such a mind, has no place in command of troops, because nobody knows what he ever would do. His mind does not operate with continuity.

Mr. PETERS. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, Charles Dudley Daly is one of the finest men I ever knew, and I know what I am talking about.

Athletics at Harvard University are governed by a committee of nine, composed of three undergraduates, three graduates, and three members of the faculty. For several years I was one of the three graduate members on the committee that governs Harvard athletics. I became very familiar with the personality of leading undergraduates and continued to keep in touch long after I ceased to be a member of the athletic committee. I know what I am talking about when I tell you that Daly was as highly respected by students, by professors, and by all who knew him as any man in Harvard College. I was very sorry to hear my colleague from the city of Boston [Mr. CURLEY] speak in the way he did about Daly. Daly was captain of the Harvard University football eleven, and, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, he was the best football player that Harvard has turned out for many years. But that is not a circumstance to be lightly brushed aside, Mr. Speaker. That is not an eminence that any weakling or vacillator could hope to attain.

Mr. Speaker, Capt. Daly went from Harvard, where he was universally respected, to the Military Academy at West Point, where also he was universally respected by officers and men alike. I do not know anything about these political difficulties in the city of Boston. I do not represent the city of Boston. I can not tell this House the rights and wrongs of Daly's trouble with Mayor Fitzgerald. I have risen merely to testify to his character and to say to my colleague from Boston [Mr. CURLEY] and to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that, in my opinion, they have to-night done Daly a great injustice.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I take this time in order to enter a protest against the treatment accorded the suffragist parade this afternoon by the police authorities of the city of Washington. Before making my protest I wish to say that, in my judgment, this parade, in length, in organization, in harmony, in orderly conduct, and withal in enthusiasm, has not had its parallel in American history.

I wish also to state that the congressional section, counting some score of Senators and Members of Congress, aided by Judge RUCKER, a Confederate veteran, bearing the flag of equal suffrage at its head, did not reflect discredit, to say the least, on the membership of the House and the Senate.

With these preliminaries, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that yesterday, by a vote of 200 to 50, the House adopted the Senate resolution to give protection to these good women as they marched through the streets of Washington, not only requiring traffic to be stopped, but the resolution ended with this line of instruction to the police commissioner, "and to prevent any interference with the suffrage procession on that day."

The congressional section was probably half down the column, and by the time we reached Sixth or Seventh Street the crowd was surging in. We were marching arm's length from each other, four abreast. We were crowded into three abreast and then two abreast, and it was with great difficulty—almost personal encounters—that we finally made our way in single file, with the police on both sides laughing with the ruffians. I have been called over the telephone since then and told by a lady that her young daughter was on one of the floats and a ruffian climbed on the float and insulted her daughter.

Mr. MANN. Her daughter ought to have been at home.

Mr. RAKER. She had as much right there as anyone. The gentleman ought to be ashamed of himself to make such a remark.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman from Illinois does not mean that he would not give protection to this woman. [Applause.] I wish to add that I requested the War Department for a troop of Cavalry as an escort to the congressional section and the Secretary of War refused my request. If I had time I would go into detail and cite cases, but I sum up by stating what I would embrace in a resolution were we not in the closing hours of this Congress—that the Federal and municipal authorities were grossly and willfully negligent in the performance of their duties in accord with the resolution of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Whose time does it come out of?

Mr. COOPER. I think somebody ought to have time enough to reply to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no control over the time. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that none of these gentlemen are debating the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. I object.

Mr. SISSON. I object, unless the gentleman discusses the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that I have 10 minutes left.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 10 minutes left.

Mr. PETERS. I yield five minutes to my colleague [Mr. MCCALL].

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anything about the difference between Mr. Daly and the mayor of Boston, but I have just a shrewd suspicion that if Mr. Daly were here to tell his side of the story we would find that he had one, and it would not be the first time that it has happened in politics in Boston that one of the heads of the department has had a ground of his own in any difference with the mayor.

The gentleman from Illinois has unearthed some facts of this case; but I do not think he has followed his usual judgment on those facts. I think a great wrong would be done this young man to refuse to pass this bill. I do not have the pleasure of a personal acquaintance with him as has my colleague who has just spoken; he has spoken, from a personal acquaintance, in the highest terms of Mr. Daly. But my associations have led me to know of Mr. Daly very well in the past, and I believe that every word that was spoken by my colleague concerning him is strictly true.

It has been said that he was the captain of the Harvard football team. I have seen him play in some of the great games. I have seen him play in the Yale game. That is a position that requires not merely skill and good judgment, but he played the games brilliantly and managed his team well. He showed fine leadership in those games, the very quality that a soldier should have. When he went to West Point, if I am correctly informed, he was made the captain of the football team, and he made a very brilliant record upon his team there. He has shown just the qualities for a brilliant soldier, and because he has not succeeded as a note broker, and because he got into difficulty with the mayor of the city of Boston in the politics of that city I do not think are facts that constitute any reason why we should repudiate the report of the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House, both of which reports are in favor of this young man.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCALL. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. I would ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if it is not a fact that the greatest general since the Revolutionary War was a failure in every private enterprise he undertook? I refer to Gen. Grant.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. I think if Gen. Grant's case were up to-night, and we were reviewing his business career, we would refuse, if these arguments are valid, to give him a position as lieutenant in the Army. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] half a minute.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of an account of the proceedings and resolutions of the Harrison County Bar Association on Senator Money of Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolutions and proceedings referred to are as follows:

[From the Biloxi (Miss.) Daily Herald.]

LATE SENATOR HERNANDO D. MONEY ONE OF THE GREATEST MEN OF HIS DAY—GLOWING TRIBUTE TO LIFE AND CHARACTER OF LATE SENATOR MONEY—MEMBERS OF HARRISON COUNTY BAR AND PROMINENT CITIZENS CHARACTERIZE MISSISSIPPI SENATOR AS ONE OF THE GREATEST MEN OF HIS DAY.

GULFPORT, October 8.

In resolutions drawn by a committee of the Harrison County Bar Association and in addresses by members of that association the late Senator Money was eulogized at a meeting at the courthouse in Gulfport last night as one of the greatest, wisest, and best men of the age, an honor to Mississippi, a man who had been of the greatest service to his country, a man of really fine and lovable character, true to his friends and devoted to his family. No one being present, whether a Mississippian and a friend of the dead Senator and his family or whether a stranger, could have been other than deeply impressed with the sincere and spontaneous outpouring of sentiment and kindly feeling for Senator Money. Men who had known him for many, many years told of incidents in his life illustrating his character and worth and touching upon many phases of his really brilliant and many-sided character. Resolutions which were prepared by a committee and were read by former Congressman Eaton J. Bowers, comprised in themselves a gem of beautiful sentiment in beautiful language and are fit to be handed down to posterity through many generations to come.

Of interest was the fact that Senator Money's two sons, George P. Money and Hernan D. Money, and Mrs. George P. Money were present and were conducted to positions of vantage in the auditorium. Feeling as they still do the keen sorrow incident to the death of their father, they could not have been conscious of aught but pride and thankfulness that they had themselves lived to see the day when their father's memory should be so revered and should be paid so many sincere tributes by men themselves distinguished and in the forefront of public life.

Senator W. G. Evans called the meeting to order and asked Judge T. H. Barrett, the present circuit court judge of this district, to preside. Dr. H. H. Sneed offered the opening prayer.

Ex-Congressman Eaton J. Bowers then read the resolutions which are hereto appended, and which, as stated, were prepared by the committee whose names are signed thereto.

Resolutions.

The following brief and modest biography compiled or authorized by Senator Money is taken from the Congressional Directory of the Sixty-first Congress:

Hernando De Soto Money, Democrat, of Mississippi City, was born August 26, 1839, in Holmes County, Miss.; was educated at the University of Mississippi, at Oxford, Miss.; is a lawyer and planter; served in the Confederate Army from the beginning of the war until September 26, 1864, when he was forced to retire from service by defective eyesight; was elected to the House of Representatives in the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, Forty-eighth, Fifty-third, and Fifty-fourth Congresses; in January, 1896, was elected to the Senate for the term beginning March 4, 1899; was appointed to the United States Senate October 8, 1897, to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Hon. J. Z. George on August 14, 1897; in January, 1898, elected by the legislature to fill out the unexpired term ending March 3, 1899. Was renominated by the Democratic Party in primary August 6, 1903, and elected to succeed himself for the term beginning March 4, 1905, and ending March 3, 1911.

Few men have loomed larger across the horizon of Mississippi, or filled a greater or more important part in her affairs and history than Senator Money. Born in Mississippi, educated in her university, nearly 50 years out of a life of 73 were spent directly or indirectly in her service.

At the outbreak of the Civil War he had just reached man's estate, and he threw himself into the cause and defense of his State with all the ardor and fidelity of a true and intense nature. After a service that lasted through practically the entire period of hostilities, he returned to take up the task of the redemption of the State. He spoke, wrote, counseled, and labored constantly and efficiently, and none contributed more than he to the successful outcome of that struggle. The prominent part that he took in the stirring years from 1865 to 1874, together with his splendid equipment and remarkable talents, caused him to be the nominee of the Democratic Party for Congress in 1874, and he was elected in that general upheaval that amounted almost to revolution, and that wrested Mississippi from the alien and spoiler and restored control to her own people.

In Congress he immediately took rank with the first, and soon rose to the head of the important committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. With the thoroughness that characterized him he mastered the whole postal system of the United States, and was a recognized authority on that subject during all of his public life.

"After having served five terms, he declined reelection and practiced his profession, the law, for eight years in Washington, D. C., still retaining his residence in Mississippi until 1892, when he was again, and at a time when he was not a candidate, nominated and elected to Congress, where he served until he was appointed to the United States Senate in October, 1897, to fill the unexpired term of Senator George. He had before that time and in January, 1896, been elected by the legislature to succeed Senator George, who had announced that he intended to retire at the end of his term, and was again, in 1903, chosen by primary election to succeed himself. At the end of his second term he voluntarily retired, at a time when he was without opposition and when each of the candidates for the succession had announced that they would not oppose him. Practically his whole life from 1861 to 1911, from 21 years of age to 71, nearly 50 years, was spent in the service of the State.

"While he attained very high rank in the House of Representatives, his greatest reputation was achieved in the Senate. In that body he was an authority on finance, the tariff, the foreign relations, and policy of the United States, on agriculture, and the governmental activities in that field, on commerce—indeed it can almost be said of him as to the affairs of the Government, as Bacon said of himself, that he took all knowledge for his province.

"Some one has said: 'Reading makes a full man, conference a ready man, writing an exact man.' Whether Senator MONEY acquired these faculties in that way we know not, but we do know that neither in the fullness and accuracy of his knowledge nor in readiness and facility in its use, had he a superior in the public men of our time and generation. His ripe scholarship was recognized by his colleagues, who availed themselves without stint, of his full and accurate learning. On one occasion in the cloak room of the Senate, one of the ablest and most scholarly Members of that body came to him and said, 'MONEY, I am going to make a speech on ———,' naming the subject, 'and there is one point on which I have not been able to advise myself to my entire satisfaction, and I have determined to take the shortest route to the information and ask you.' Whereupon, for a half hour or more, Senator MONEY discoursed upon the matter mentioned, completely covering it in all its phases.

"He addressed the Senate frequently, but no more so than the approval and interest of his colleagues justified. He followed closely and was interested in all legislation, and spoke when he felt he should, and never without contributing to the solution of the matter at issue. Like most men of extraordinary reading and equipment, many of his best and most forceful speeches were extemporaneous, and one of these, which was perhaps his greatest effort, has been lost. It was a speech made in an executive session of the Senate. During the course of a speech by a southern Senator in opposition to confirmation of a negro appointee to an important office, a question was asked by a northern Senator, which the former either did not hear or, if he heard, overlooked. Senator Money rose and asked leave of the Senator to answer it, which being granted he did so fully and thoroughly. His remarks provoked other questions, and in a few moments he was launched into a remarkable and eloquent discourse upon the situation of the South and her peculiar problems, and for two hours or more he addressed the Senate in what was, by the unanimous voice of the Senators present, one of the greatest speeches ever delivered in that body.

"It was the marvel of all who knew him how, with failing vision that had for years prevented his reading, he not only retained what he had read, but kept abreast with all progress and with everything new. To us a greater marvel was the wonderfully logical mental arrangement of his learning and the quickness and facility with which it responded to the need of every occasion. He was an authority on every matter about which he assumed to speak, and when he had spoken as to any matter of history or fact it was generally conceded that the last word had been said.

"He was thoroughly imbued with the Democratic theory of government, and he understood that theory perfectly and in every detail. He was a reformer where reform was real and substantial, but he deprecated and opposed any deviation from the fixed landmarks of Democracy and of the Constitution. He was an advocate of representative government as designed and expounded by the makers of the Constitution and the founder of his party, and he opposed any departure from their doctrines on that fundamental point. He was a party man, believed in a government by parties, and served his party without deviation or shadow of turning, because he believed that it represented the proper governmental principles and ideals. He was for quite a period Democratic leader in the Senate, and he exacted and expected of his colleagues the same fealty that he himself delighted to yield.

"In his friendships he was strong and steadfast, and there was no limit within the bounds of propriety to his service to his friends. Devoid of egotism, he had no false or strained modesty, and he demanded without hesitation what he deemed the due either of himself or friends.

"His nature was ardent, frank, and open. He had no concealments and he spoke as his mind thought. His ideals were pure and elevated, his sense of honor quick and accurate, and his advocacy of right, as it was given him to see the right, was vigorous and constant. He was singularly independent both in thought and action. He was an original, virile thinker and he acted his thoughts. Being assured that he was right, he feared no consequences. Indeed, he never contemplated the possibility of consequences.

"His devotion to his friends was an index of his love for his family, which almost passed understanding and was the dominant note in his life. They were first and always in his thoughts, as in his love. Perfectly happy with them, he was never content when separated from them, and they vied with him not only in the affection that they bestowed upon him but in the manifestation and expression of it. No clan of people were ever closer and no more beautifully united and affectionate family ever existed. All of his people were of his household, and neither distance nor separation nor circumstance served to alter that fact with him. He exemplified the words of the Scotch poet:

"'The span o' life's nae lang enow,
Nor deep enow the sea,
Nor braid enow this weary warld,
To keep my ain frae me.'

"Happy are we that his last years, the evening of his full well-ordered and well-rounded life, were spent in our midst.

"His life was an inspiration, his friendship an honor as well as a guide and support; intercourse with him a liberal education; and now that he has passed away the bar of this county honors itself in paying this tribute to his memory.

"We shall not soon look upon his like again: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That in the death of Hernando De Soto Money the State and Nation have lost a patriotic son and faithful servant, this section a beloved and upright citizen, the bar an honored member, and his family a fond and devoted father.

"Resolved, second, That the president of this association be directed to present a copy of these resolutions to the next term of the circuit court of this county, with a request that the same be spread upon the minutes of the court and the secretary directed to forward a copy hereof to the family of Senator Money and furnish copies thereof to the press.

"W. G. EVANS,
"J. H. NEVILLE,
"GEO. S. DODDS,
"T. A. WOOD,
"J. A. LEATHERS,
"E. J. BOWERS."

Before taking his seat, Mr. Bowers added his personal tribute to the memory of his dead friend. In doing so he stated that this friendship had lasted for over 10 years. He related the manner of their meeting in Washington when both were in public life, the one as a United States Senator, the other as a Member of Congress. There was no special reason, he said, why Senator Money should have tendered him his services. He, himself, had no special claim upon Senator Money. Yet the Senator, shortly after Mr. Bowers went to Washington, came to him and in the kindliest manner placed at his disposal his great learning and his valuable influence, which latter extended to both Houses of Congress and into all executive departments. Every courtesy was shown him by Senator Money. "Senator Money," said Mr. Bowers, "was a man who kept the faith, the faith not only of his fathers, but the faith that the people confided to him," and he had now gone to that reward which without doubt awaited him.

Rev. J. L. Finley, from the audience, spoke of his regard for the fine character and personal integrity of Senator Money.

Attorney J. L. Taylor, in adding his tribute, stated that Senator Money had been in public life for 50 years, and during all these years, and in a time when wealth played so important a part in all men's undertakings, and when so many were accused of using their office for selfish gain, not one word had ever been heard reflecting on Senator Money's public or private life. He was a man who was great in a greater sense than could be expressed by the mere greatness of wealth.

Judge James H. Neville, in beautifully chosen language, gave expression to the love and esteem which had grown up between the two men during a friendship of many years, a friendship, said Judge Neville, which began 37 years ago, in 1875, during what was, in his judgment, the most perilous period in the history of Mississippi. During this time when bad and corrupt men were sent here to govern the people of Mississippi, men who were ready to bargain and truckle with the influential men of the State and offer them office and wealth for their influence, Senator Money remained true to his State and his people, even at the risk of persecution and imprisonment; and of all the men who stood true to their convictions and their people, Senator H. D. Money stood out as the brightest of them all. Judge Neville delved into the bygone years, bringing to light incidents of Senator Money's distinguished career.

He referred particularly to Senator Money's wonderful knowledge of postal affairs. He went to Congress determined to master one thing. He was placed on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, then considered of little importance. He absolutely mastered this department of Government, and Judge Neville believed that the great advancement made in this department in later years was due very largely to Senator Money's knowledge and influence. Senator Money became and remained throughout his career a recognized authority on all matters pertaining to the postal department. At one time while on a visit to Mexico, Senator Money was introduced by the President of that Republic to the Mexican Congress as having done more for the postal department of the American Government than any man who ever lived.

Attorney James B. Cable spoke briefly mentioning a tribute paid to Senator Money by a paper in "Yankeeland." The editor of this paper, which was published in New Hampshire, in an article of length called attention in unstinted terms to Senator Money's character and attainments and to his worth to the Nation at large.

Attorney D. M. Graham expressed his high personal regard for Senator Money, and dwelling especially on the late Senator's fine private character, read a part of a deed of certain property to him by his children in which the principal consideration was his love and affection for them, and in which their love for him was also expressed in most beautiful language.

Senator W. G. Evans alluded to Senator Money's career as a Confederate soldier, which had not before been referred to. He said he had for many years been a personal and political friend of Senator Money's. He concluded by saying that "while the remains of Senator Money are wrapped in the bosom of his native State, may the sod rest lightly upon him while the people of the great Commonwealth with one voice, forever say, 'Well done, thou good and faithful servant.'"

After the adoption of the resolutions the meeting was quietly adjourned.

Some 20 or 25 attorneys represented the bar association, while many men of prominence and not a few ladies were seated in the auditorium.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN].

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on ball playing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, if the issue in this contest were between the mayor of the city of Boston and Charles Dudley Daly, I would be against Mr. Daly and with the mayor. If the issue were between Charles Dudley Daly and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY], I would be with Mr. CURLEY and against Mr. Daly. But the issue here, as I conceive it, is whether or not Charles Dudley Daly, a former student of the Boston Latin School, a graduate of Harvard College in the class of 1901, and a graduate of the Military Academy in the class of 1905, should be reinstated as a lieutenant in the Field Artillery of the Army of the United States.

I happened to be in the office of Gen. Wood, the commanding officer of the United States Army, a few weeks ago. I called there to present the commanding officer of one of the regiments of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia. After I had presented the colonel and the usual courtesies had been passed, Gen. Wood turned to me and said, "MURRAY, what are you going to do in the House of Representatives in regard to the bill to reinstate Daly in the Army?" I said, "General, what do you think about that bill," because, frankly, I was in some doubt about it for the reasons so eloquently set forth by my distinguished and able colleague [Mr. CURLEY]. Gen. Wood said to me, "MURRAY, Daly is a graduate of Harvard and has had the training of that splendid institution. Daly is a graduate of West Point and has had the training of that splendid institution. He has tried to make good in private life, but for one reason or another he has not made good; but he will make good in the Army, as he did make good for a year, and if you do not give him back to us in the Army it is a wasted life that will be his."

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] points to the fact that for a time he was a note broker, and that he did not make good. Mr. Speaker, I do not know much about note brokers, but I do know something about the kind of bond salesman that Daly tried to be in Boston. I do know that bond houses there sometimes get young men of large acquaintance, who have the entrée into clubs and societies of one sort and another, and, paying them a small weekly salary, put them on a percentage basis, and according as they bring into the banking houses valuable customers and can get large trades for those banking houses, they are given great or small rewards and emoluments. I hold no brief for Daly, but I say the fact that he did not make good as a bond salesman in Boston, the fact that he did not make good as a note broker in Boston, may be something everlastingly to his credit rather than to his discredit in this situation. [Applause.] Now, I know Daly better than any one of these men, because I not only went to school at Harvard College when he was there but I went to the Boston Latin School when he was there. I have no cordial personal relations with him, because I had political differences with him when he was fire commissioner, just as my distinguished colleague had——

Mr. CURLEY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MURRAY. I have not the time. I had differences just as he had, but this is no time for us to fight our political differences in the city of Boston. It requires a two-thirds vote to put this bill through. It is a significant thing that of the three Representatives in Congress who come to you from the city of Boston, two-thirds are in favor of this measure and one-third is against it. Let me express the hope that when the vote is taken the vote of this House as it is now constituted will be two-thirds in favor and one-third against. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says Daly never made good anywhere. Let me tell you in the year when I was a freshman at Cambridge he made good sufficient to be the marshal of his class, a position given to him because his classmates thought he had made good. Let me tell you in the report filed by this committee it is stated that one year he was third in his class at West Point, that another year he was second in his class at West Point, and that another year he was first in his class at West Point. I never went to West Point, and frankly, gentlemen, the reason I never went to West Point is because away back in 1900 Charles D. Daly was appointed to West Point by the then Congressman Fitzgerald, now mayor of Boston, to a place to which I aspired with all the enthusiasm that I ever had in aspiring to anything. [Applause.]

Daly beat me for that place, and frankly I am glad of it, and he not only beat me but he beat a great crowd of fellows who tried to win that appointment from Congressman Fitzgerald, and the reason he beat us was because he passed the very best mental and physical examination of any of that great number who took the test. [Applause.] What should be the test of making good; what should be the test for the purpose of determining this matter of reinstating or refusing to reinstate Daly? I believe the test should consider mental and physical equipment, and on those considerations I rest this case. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and Senate bill 7747 passed?

The question was taken; and, two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28812) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 7875) to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in the Chuckawalla Valley and Palo Verde Mesa, Riverside County, Cal.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 73.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the managers on the part of the two Houses be authorized and directed to insert in H. R. 28858, an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes, the following:

"After March 4, 1913, those members of the Committee on the Judiciary who are Members elect of the House to the Sixty-third Congress, or a majority of them, until the meeting of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, and the Committee on the Judiciary during the first session of that Congress are authorized to expend for experts, accountants, and clerical and other assistants for the purposes stated in House resolution 486, out of the contingent fund of the House, a sum not in excess of the balance unexpended under said resolution."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement. I understand that the leader on the other side of the House, at this late hour of the night, prefers the balance of the business transacted should be by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If that is the case, I recognize the fact, Mr. Speaker, that at this late hour of the night we must get the balance of these supply bills through by the good nature of the House, and I would suggest that the business, except the supply bills, be transacted by unanimous consent.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. May I have the opportunity to call up the bill concerning which I spoke to the gentleman?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. By unanimous consent. Everybody an call up business——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. May I ask the gentleman, suppose the bill is called up by unanimous consent and it is objected to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I take it no gentleman here would want to raise the question of a quorum with three great supply bills out.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is what I asked. If a bill is brought up by unanimous consent and objection is made, is it the gentleman's proposition that the proponent of the bill would not have the right to move to suspend the rules and pass it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois requested and we have to do business by unanimous consent.

Mr. TILSON. In regard to the bill I spoke to the gentleman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection.

Mr. TILSON. It is a bill of the same kind as the one passed, except it is, in my opinion, a very much better bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We do not want the point of no quorum raised.

Mr. MANN. It is quite apparent we can not pass very many bills under suspension of the rules at this time in the morning.

Whether we can pass any bills by asking for unanimous consent I do not know. We have not been very lucky about it in the last few weeks. It seems to me we might try that. I will make a point of no quorum if any more of these reinstatement bills are called up.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I would like to ask him if it is his idea to take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar or any bill by unanimous consent?

Mr. MANN. I should be perfectly willing to stay here and let any gentleman call up any bill by unanimous consent, so far as I am concerned. That is a matter of recognition on the part of the Speaker.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will propound his query. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-seven gentlemen are present—a quorum.

Mr. RAKER, Mr. TILSON, and Mr. WARBURTON rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

EXCHANGE OF LAND FOR SCHOOL SECTIONS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 5068.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to make a short announcement, and that is that he will not agree to recognize anybody to suspend the rules unless the gentleman is willing to withdraw it if it runs to a point where there is going to be a question of no quorum raised.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I am in the position that if the point of no quorum is made I will have to withdraw it. I state that to the Speaker, and I will do it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reads as follows:

A bill (S. 5068) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to make exchange of lands with the several States for those portions of the lands granted in aid of common schools, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, which lie within the exterior limits of any Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, the said exchange to be made in the manner and form and subject to the limitations and conditions of sections 2275 and 2276 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stats., 796), and any such exchange, whether heretofore or hereafter approved, shall restore full title in the United States to the base land, without formal conveyance thereof by the State: Provided, That upon completion of the exchange the lands relinquished, reconveyed, or assigned as base lands shall immediately become a part of the reservation within which they are situate, and in case the same shall be found within the exterior limits of more than one reservation they shall become a part of that reservation which was first established: Provided further, That this act shall not be construed to authorize the approval of selections embracing lands withdrawn as mineral under the act of June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases" (36 U. S. Stat. L., pp. 847–848), until such lands have been found to be nonmineral and for that reason restored, but nothing herein contained shall prevent a limited approval, when the lands are within only a coal withdrawal, excluding from the approval coal deposits: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the State of Idaho.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. First, the Clerk will read the amendment at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, on page 2, the following: "And in case the same shall be found within the exterior limits or more than one reservation they shall become a part of that reservation which was first established."

And strike out the comma after the word "situate," in line 10, same page.

Second amendment:

In line 15, page 2, strike out the words "as mineral."

Amendment 3:

Line 18, page 2, strike out all of line 18, after the word "cases," and all of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, and lines 1 and 2, on page 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] demands a second.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from California is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois to 20 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair notify me when I use five minutes? That is all I wish.

This bill, as it now stands, with the amendments, comes from the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, after they had gone over it and reported it favorably. It was taken up by the Senate committee, and gone through fully by them, and then passed the Senate. It has for its object, first, that sections 16 and 36, granted to the State, included in reserves such as Indian, military, and national forests, should be exchanged for lands of equal size. When these reserves were created the lands within them belonged to the State. The State then made application for land outside of the reserve, and we now ask that those locations be confirmed. It not only applies to the State of California, but applies to a number of the Western States. The second provision is so as to make it clear that the lands thus situated should go back to the reserves in which they were when selected.

In the second section there is an amendment so as to avoid any possibility that the lands withdrawn under the Pickett bill shall not be affected by this act. I want to call the attention of the House that in the report the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the attorney general of the State of California, and the Legislature of California have gone over this matter and recommend that the legislation be adopted.

The Secretary of the Interior on February 11, 1913, suggested as to these amendments that it is to the interest of the public that this legislation be adopted. A few days subsequently a very lengthy decision was rendered by the Secretary of the Interior covering the entire situation of the land matters, and it was inserted in the RECORD under date of February 18, 1913, on page 3606, stating the entire history of these matters—stating that the Secretary of the Interior had recommended and had approved all of these selections, and had suggested to Congress that Senate bill 5068 was such legislation as he believed in his judgment ought to be passed in order to straighten up the entire condition as to the land matters growing out of this, so that the matter would not be involved in the decision rendered in the case known as the Slack case, where the court held that the State could not make its selection, and the Land Office held that it could.

But since the Secretary of the Interior has now approved of all the surveys and approved all the applications, this bill will change the matter and put it in the condition it ought to be in, and will give the Government the title to its lands in exchange and give the individuals, who have applied to the State for land, their land without any question.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman intends to raise a point of no quorum, the Chair will request him to say so right now.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I do so now.

Mr. RAKER. Then I withdraw my bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I want to know if it is not in order to call up a bill that is privileged under the rule?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then I desire to call up House bill 28093.

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Florida said he would make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquired if any gentleman intended to make the point of no quorum on that bill if it went on, and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] responded that he did.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I did make the point, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not invite any gentleman to make it. [Laughter.] Of course the gentleman has the right to make it, but the Chair is trying to economize time. Does the gentleman from Florida insist upon the point of no quorum?

Mr CLARK of Florida. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that that point is dilatory. Just a few moments ago the Speaker ascertained that there was a quorum present. There were 197 Members present.

Mr. MANN. He counted 197.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; there were 197 present. I make the point that the point of order is dilatory.

Mr. MANN. There is no quorum here now. There may be one again, but there is none now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] withdraws the point of no quorum. The Chair desires to make a statement after we get through with this privileged matter of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL]. If anyone intends, when a bill is called up under suspension of the rules, ultimately to make the point of no quorum, he ought to notify the Chair and the House. There are some bills here that ought to be got through. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. As I stated to the Speaker, if a point of order was made, I will withdraw the request. Does that apply if the gentleman from Florida withdraws?

The SPEAKER. Of course it did. What the Chair is trying to do is to get these little bills passed that gentlemen are interested in, and which ought to be passed, and when a gentleman notifies the Chair that he is going to make the point of no quorum if a certain bill is to be taken up time can be saved thereby.

Mr. RAKER. Now, suppose I should say that I would make the point of order on these other matters. There does not seem to be sufficient courtesy in these matters in the House. The department has asked that this legislation be had.

I just want a few moments on this matter. I have gone to the departments and to these committees, and have presented this matter with all the diligence that a man could, and have obtained the decision of the department that this legislation ought to be passed. I have stepped aside for other Members and have not imposed myself upon them; but to-night, if when I have asked for proper legislation on behalf of my State I am to be defeated, I feel in duty bound that I must insist that from now on there shall be a quorum in this House. I have never done it before. I appeal to you gentlemen to-night that I ought not to be put in this position. If I had a bill that did not have merit, if I had not diligently and honestly worked upon it, I should not feel as I do about it. I will ask the gentleman if he has any objection to the merits of this bill?

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. What bill?

Mr. MURRAY. The bill that the gentleman from California is trying to call up.

Mr. MANN. There is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HEFLIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Florida raised the point of no quorum. He then withdrew it, and that left the gentleman from California with his bill before the House just as it was before the point was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not state that exactly right. The Chair stated that if any gentleman intended ultimately to raise the point of no quorum against the bill the Chair wished he would do so when the bill was read by title, so that gentlemen who have bills that nobody objects to particularly can get them through.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, of course we are all tired and worn out and trying to do our duty to the country and to our constituents. The point of no quorum at this time, if we should adjourn, would adjourn us until the end of this session. We might not get a quorum, or it would be difficult to get one, before 6 or 7 o'clock. It would mean that a number of the great supply bills must fail. I am sure that there is no gentleman in this House, realizing his duty to his constituents and his duty to the country, who would be willing to destroy the great supply bills. His constituents would not expect that of him.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not referring particularly to the gentleman from California. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. RAKER. I have asked very little from this House, but I believe a man has a right to represent his constituents here. I think it is his duty to represent his constituents and his State. The great State of California, through its legislature, has been asking for this legislation. Some one, somehow, has sent to my constituents in my State the charge that as a Democrat I could not secure legislation from my Democratic brethren. I am the only Democrat from California, and I have stood it as long as I can when I know it is not true, and gentlemen know I ought not to be put in that position in my State. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from California that the statement that he has not represented his constituency and that he has not brought forth fruitful legislation is known by his colleagues here to be untrue. [Applause.] He has gotten his fair share of the legislation that has come forth in this House.

But, gentlemen, we must be good-natured. If we are not, we shall destroy the action of this House. I appeal to the gentleman from California and to my other colleagues that we go along, if we can, and agree on bills by unanimous consent. If we can not, then nobody can hold you responsible.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be recognized to move to suspend the rules on this bill.

The SPEAKER. He has been once recognized for that purpose.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask that he be again recognized for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I should like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama. It is perfectly apparent that the House, in its present temper, with the Members largely tired out, at 3 o'clock in the morning, will not proceed to do business, either by unanimous consent or otherwise, in the absence of a quorum, and there is no quorum here.

The first thing the gentleman from Alabama knows he will have no method of doing business in reference to appropriation bills that are outstanding unless he takes a recess.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Before the gentleman from Alabama makes a request for a recess, will he let me make a statement of about two minutes? There is a bill that I have been endeavoring to get recognition for. It is not a private bill; it is not a bill that I have the slightest interest in or that my district or State has any interest in. It is a bill that I am trying to get up as chairman of the committee that reported it. It relates to Alaska. It is a bill that will not be objected to by anybody in the House if I can get recognition. If I can not get recognition to-night the bill will not become a law this session. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not ask for a recess until I at least have an opportunity to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of that bill.

Private bills that affected nobody, except the individual mentioned in the bill, have been taken up for the last day or two. This is a bill that affects the great Territory of Alaska, and, as I say, it is a bill that no individual in the House has any particular interest in, and I only beg to get it up as chairman of the committee that was ordered to report it. I hope the gentleman will not ask for a recess until I have that opportunity.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, to make myself plain, so that Members will fully understand me and to show the fairness with which the Speaker has treated me, I want to say that a month before this House adjourned at the second session I was placed sixth on the list. The Speaker has continued to treat me fairly, but I told him that I would yield to all others that had matters of importance that would affect the country and to put me further down on the list. So gentlemen can see that all of this time I have yielded to others. I say to my colleagues that I do not like to come here and be idle. I want to attend to these things that ought to be attended to, and it seems to me I ought to be out of the Chamber instead of being here if I can not represent my district and my State. In my own county and 16 counties of my State we are being compelled to refund from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars this year on taxes because the title of this land is not in the parties in whom it ought to be.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I think if the gentleman asks unanimous consent he can get his bill passed.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill with the amendments presented.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know why a single Member, because he threatens to make a point of no quorum, should have his bill brought up while other Members have been waiting all day to have their bills considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make a statement. The Chair does not know whether he has adopted the right or the wrong plan. This matter of suspension of the rules is entirely within the discretion of the Speaker. The Chair did not know any other way to do it, although he may study out one and a better plan, but he took them in the order in which they come, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] stated the exact truth. He stood sixth on the list to begin with, and he did let in gentlemen who had matters of pressing importance. The Chair thought it was his duty to recognize him, and started in to try and adhere to this list.

We got blocked the other morning, with not more than 20 Members in the House. The gentleman from Massachusetts had a bill up, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] notified the gentleman publicly that he was going to raise the point of no quorum. The Chair asked the gentleman publicly to withdraw the bill and promised to recognize him the first time we got a quorum. He would have been recognized long ago and his bill out of the way, but we went on then for three or four hours, nobody raising the point of no quorum, until finally some one demanded a roll call. The Chair counted the Members of the House 10 or 15 times, first and last, to see if a quorum had gotten in in order to carry out faith with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS]. The first time we got a quorum there were three or four appropriation bills up. The Chair sat here until about an hour ago waiting for this opportunity to come. The Chair has tried to be fair about this business. He does not want the fruits of this session lost by somebody raising the point of no quorum at this time.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I was eighth on the list, and the gentleman from Illinois persistently raised the point of no quorum against me, and yet he let other bills of the very same nature, some not as meritorious as my bill, be passed, without raising the point of no quorum. I do not propose to raise the point of no quorum against this gentleman, but I do think that the Members here ought to treat one another fairly and equally. If the gentleman persists in raising the point of no quorum against me, he ought also to raise it against the gentleman from California, and against all having bills similar to mine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to raise a point of no quorum at any time, and he does not have to assign any reason for it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to recognize the gentleman from California to suspend the rules.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote upon this matter.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we ought not to be so hasty as all that.

The SPEAKER. There is debate of 20 minutes allowed each side.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman from California a while ago withdraw his motion for suspension of the rules?

Mr. RAKER. Under the statement of the Speaker I said that I would if the point of order of no quorum was made, and of course I did it. Then I made a parliamentary inquiry, and I understood if the gentleman withdrew his point of order that that would reinstate my motion.

Mr. MANN. Having withdrawn his motion for suspension of the rules, does the gentleman now renew it?

The SPEAKER. Let us begin over again.

Mr. MANN. I am asking for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, with the amendments. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from California is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I have already used 5 minutes, and I reserve the 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves his time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], in proposing his measure, has not taken the opportunity to state to the House what it is. Under the law school sections are given to the different States. The State of California is entitled to sections 16 and 36 in each township. Where, for any reason, the State can not obtain the actual land itself, it is permitted to select other land in its place. The State of California has considerable land in forest reservations, and that land in the main, or much of it, the State can not take, and is entitled to take lieu land in place of it; but where the land in the forest reservations which would go to the State has been surveyed, the holding is that the title upon the survey passes to the State of California, and the State owns the title, so it is claimed. This bill proposes to permit the State to accept other land in place of this surveyed land, called base land in other parts of the State. This base land in the forest reserves in most cases is of little value. Most of it that has not been taken up is not forested. Much of this land in the forest reserves which has been surveyed and would go to the State as sections 16 and 36 is practically waste land. The State, which does not want the land, sells, or until recently did sell, the right to people to take the lieu lands, for which it has been charging $10 an acre. That is a rather profitable transaction for the State. The State trades back to the Government of the United States land of no value, much of it, in the forest reserves, and proposes then to select the base land anywhere in the State of California as lieu lands and charge a high price for it.

That is one aspect of the case which never has strongly commended itself to me, but there is another. In the days when Hyde and Benson were perpetrating their crimes upon the country it is said they had a pipe line connected with some of the officials of the Government under which they obtained advance information as to the creation of a forest reservation, and wild land of no value to-day which no one would take and settle upon belonging to the State as its school sections to-morrow was covered into the forest reserves, and Hyde and Benson made a claim to that State land, and then had it used as a base for selecting valuable timbered lieu land outside of the forest reserves in the very best forests in California. Since that time another crook by the name of Lake has set up a claim on these base lands in the forest reserve, and I have been somewhat divided in sympathy between Hyde and Benson on one side and Lake on the other, because it is perfectly apparent that Hyde and Benson are criminals and Lake a blackmailer.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield? How many acres of land are involved in this proposition, if the gentleman knows?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not recall at present, but there is a very large amount.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman know as to California?

Mr. MANN. Well, of course the land involved in the bill covers all the land covered in forest reserves in any State. As a matter of fact, the department has always held that it had the authority to make the change, and they had not only always held the authority, but they now hold they have the authority, and they make this exchange to every other State in the Union except California, and I think they would make the exchange now with the State of California, except that nobody knows what title we would get if we made the exchange. I want to read a short statement in the report, a letter addressed to the gentleman from California by the attorney general of California.

Shortly after Mr. Kingsbury took office as surveyor general of California, in January of 1907, he also discovered that indemnity or lieu lands were almost entirely controlled by F. A. Hyde. Hyde was enabled to control these lands by reason of the fact that until a section of school land was placed within the limits of a reservation created by proclamation of the President, no lands could be selected in lieu thereof, nor could any applicant file an application for lieu lands in the State land office. For years Mr. Hyde was enabled to secure the first information as to the creation of national reservations, which thereby enabled him, under the laws of California, to file applications before any other person had the necessary information. To correct this condition and to permit the State to secure the benefit of controlling these lieu-lands selections, Senator Thompson, the surveyor general, and myself drafted a bill which is known as the "Thompson bill," and which was passed by the legislature in 1909, which was the first session of the legislature after Gen. Kingsbury took office. This bill withdrew all such sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections from sale or use by any person and provided a method of sale at public auction. The plan has worked very well and has enriched the State to the extent of several hundred thousands of dollars, the last sale bringing close to $10 per acre instead of $1.25, as they had previous to that time. It also had the effect of stopping the activities of F. A. Hyde and those operating with him.

The step of Mr. Hyde is a good thing, and it is Hyde's grantees, said to be innocent men—some of them probably are—who are now seeking this legislation to secure title to forest lands in California growing out of the criminal transactions of Benson and Hyde, many of those acres being worth from $100 to $500 an acre, secured through fraud. On the other hand, Mr. Lake has now filed a claim, or had men do it by his direction, upon those lands in the forest reserve which are the base lands and which were used to obtain the lieu lands outside the forest reserve. We have one set of men claiming the lieu lands outside the forest reserve and another set claiming the base lands inside the forest reserve, knowing that both of them are not entitled to the land. This bill proposes to confer title to those outside of the forest reserve and let the Government of the United States whistle unless it is decided by the courts of California Mr. Lake is not entitled to the base lands inside the forest reserve. Suppose we pass a bill like this? The men who have taken the fraudulent lieu lands on the outside get their title to it. Mr. Lake claims that he owns title from his dummies or his constituents or clients or whatever they may be who own the land on the inside of the forest reserve. This matter is pending in litigation——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a moment for a question right there?

Mr. MANN. Not unless it is in the gentleman's time—that matter is pending in litigation in California. The California courts will determine whether the title of California in this land was good and passed to the people who have filed their claims.

If we give away our title to the lieu lands outside and then the court of California decides, as gentlemen are afraid it will, that Lake and his men own the title to the California land inside the forest reserve, where will the Government get off? It will be another step, in my judgment, not intentional for the purpose of creating fraud, but with the effect not only of condoning the fraud of the past, but of encouraging the fraud that is contemplated possibly in the future. At least the Government will not only, in the first place, have given men the right in California to take forest land outside the forest reservation valued at $100 to $500 an acre with the expectation that it at least will get the title of California inside the forest reserve, but when we are through we will find we have lost title to both pieces of property. Why will not gentlemen wait until the courts of California will have determined or some one has determined whether we have the right to get the title back from California?

It is admitted that the title went to the State of California on the school lands inside of the forest reserves. Gentlemen are assuming in this bill that Congress by giving the title to lands outside of the forest reserve thereby acquires the title to lands inside the forest reserve which belong to the State of California. We can part with title which we own, but we can not by legislation take away from California title which it owned and which the people have acquired under its laws since it owned the title.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has 15 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] yield to me for five minutes?

Mr. RAKER. No. I call for a vote.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Then I will make a point of no quorum.

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Speaker, I have hesitated in making a point of no quorum at this time, not desiring to jeopardize the appropriation bills. I am willing to allow the House to pass upon the bill. I had in my desk up to yesterday a petition signed by 200 reputable residents of my chief city, Oakland, Cal., protesting against the passage of this bill. They represent one side of the contest which has been mentioned by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. They set forth that this whole question is now in court, and that this bill is an attempt to take out of the courts of California the cases that are now pending. I have also had——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there? I will give him sufficient time out of mine. Is it not a fact that these men that the gentleman is speaking of now have never paid one cent for any of this land, or attempted to pay it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am not standing here to defend these gentleman. I am standing here to make a statement in protest.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that these men who are trying to claim this land have gone to work and compelled these men to pay an amount to the extent of $5 an acre or thereabouts, and then waived any claim, and by virtue of that and the telegrams and letters, the Department of the Interior said it was their duty to protect the citizens of the State of California, and asked that this bill pass?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I am somewhat inclined to take the position of my friend from Illinois, that there may be question as to both sets of claimants. My colleague represents the authorities of the State of California, and a number in opposition reside in my congressional district.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; I do not represent any of them.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have also had in my desk a letter from a gentleman who has until recently served as United States district attorney for the district of San Francisco, the Hon. Robert T. Devlin, and in that letter he clearly shows that these cases are now in court. He is the attorney for some of these claimants who reside in my congressional district. Mr. Devlin declares that within a short time the court will hand down a decision upon these cases; and he protests in their name against the passage of this bill, which would take these gentlemen out of court. This statement I make on behalf of my constituents.

I desire unanimous consent to place in the RECORD these papers, which are not in my desk this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The papers referred to are as follows:

[Telegram.]

OAKLAND, CAL., February 1–2, 1915.

Hon. JOSEPH R. KNOWLAND,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

We earnestly solicit your protection against Raker bill, and request you to prevent unanimous consent. We are prosecuting claims in court to school section which were unlawfully tendered in exchange for lieu lands, and are advised that peculiar provision in bill authorizing allowance by Interior Department of exchanges without conveyance from State is intended to destroy our claims. Our rights should not be arbitrarily destroyed by Congress. We urge clear and full understanding of bill and full investigation before passage.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., December 30, 1912.

Hon. J. R. KNOWLAND,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KNOWLAND: I am advised that Raker bill, H. R. 25738, Union Calendar 331, is now being pressed in Washington. You are aware that many citizens of California claim title to a large portion of these lands and have brought suits against the Surveyor General which are now pending in the Superior Court of San Francisco and at Sacramento to establish their rights. The Attorney General has demurred to these petitions. The demurrer was argued some six weeks ago in San Francisco before Judge J. H. Seawell. Both parties were given time in which to file briefs, and the Attorney General has submitted his brief, and the defendants will submit theirs in a few days.

I am convinced that the argument made upon demurrer was sufficiently cogent to cause the defendants to recognize the strength of the claims of plaintiff. A similar case arose in the State of Washington, and the supreme court there decided in accordance with our contention. The vice of the Raker bill as it now exists is that it would confiscate the property rights of our clients without a hearing. No matter how strong our rights may be, it will be impossible for us to sue the United States to assert them. If the United States desires to adopt the policy of the Raker bill, it should, in all justice, provide that existing rights shall not be affected. If our clients have no rights, we gain nothing. If we have rights, then they will be preserved. All that is asked is that the legislation of Congress should not prejudice titles claimed under the State and adverse to the exchanges proposed by the Raker bill. To this no fair man can object.

I trust that you will see that such an amendment is inserted if there is a prospect of the bill passing.

With kind regards, I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours, ROBT. T. DEVLIN.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair two-thirds——

Mr. ANDERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 42.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the bill was rejected.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the privileged matter of amending the so-called Sherwood bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. RUSSELL. I refer to the bill amending the Sherwood bill, making the granting of pensions automatic. It will not take a minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill H. R. 28093, to amend the general pension act of May 11, 1912, with Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] may address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] may address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts addressing the House for five minutes if he asks that privilege for himself, but I do object to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asking it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I object, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to conduct business in this way.

Mr. MANN. I do not care; if the gentleman wishes to talk that way, he can.

Mr. LAFFERTY. What did I say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentleman from Illinois? I did not mention the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the gentleman has a gun. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANN. I am not asking the gentleman to withdraw it. I have been too courteous to the gentleman from Maryland to please him.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order or not?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not at present, but I will very shortly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will permit action on the bill.

Mr. MANN. I will say to my friend from Mississippi——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not care whether you throw it out of the window or not, but I ask that we have action upon it. The gentleman can object to it. I have no objection in the world to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] making an address. I will be delighted to hear him, but it is not fair to ask unanimous consent for anyone to address the House and say you are going to make a point of no quorum in a few moments. The gentleman is usually fair. Let us have a chance. I am perfectly willing that the bill should be objected to.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURLEY. I should like to ask if there is anything before the House at the present time?

The SPEAKER. There seems to be a conference going on between several gentlemen.

Mr. CURLEY. Pending that conference, I move to discharge the Committee on Foreign Affairs from——

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman from Illinois asks for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland objected.

Mr. WARBURTON. He withdrew it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Massachusetts having five minutes in which to address the House? The Chair hears none. [Applause.] The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCALL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, if I were to indulge in anything in the nature of a valedictory and impose it on the House, I should perhaps follow recent precedents rather than my own inclination, and I should feel that what I might say would suggest by contrast rather than by resemblance the wit of my genial colleague from Massachusetts and the grace and eloquence of my fair-haired friend from Pennsylvania. "Positively last appearances" are under suspicion. A farewell address which is engagingly spoken is apt to defeat its object, because it is liable to incite the people to take political action which may make it necessary to repeat the performance. [Laughter.]

I am not thinking of making that kind of an address, but as I am about to leave the House to-day, I thought I would like to say a few words to the Members with whom I have been associated so long. I say simply this to the Members of the House individually, that I shall be entirely satisfied if their respect for me is equal to my respect for them. [Applause.]

Of the House as a whole, I would say I reverence its structure and its place in our Constitution; but it seems to me it might occupy a more powerful practical place, and that with its democratic composition and with the popular character of our Government it rests with the House itself to say whether or not it shall be the dominating organ in our system of Government.

In my 20 years of service here I have voted against a great many measures that finally became laws; and if I had any particular regret to-night in that respect, it would be that I had not voted against more of them, because I believe there is much truth in what Mr. Burke said, that repeal is more blessed than enactment. We are acquiring a facility for passing laws; we are making such encroachments upon our own freedom that I trust those of you who remain here will do what you can to postpone the day, now threatening to come speedily, when a multiplicity of statutes shall mar the fair image of our liberties. If we are to sacrifice our freedom upon the altar of piled-up statutes, then it will only be left for us to strive to attain some such lofty but difficult refuge as that portrayed in the lines of a noble Greek poet, nobly rendered by Gilbert Murray:

But the world with a great wind blows,
Blowing to beautiful things;
On amid dark and light,
Till life, through the trammelings
Of laws that are not the right,
Breaks clear and pure, and slugs
Glorying to God in the height.

[Applause.]

NAVAL MILITIA.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I have been promised recognition to move to suspend the rules, but I desire to change that and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4584, the naval militia bill. It is very important that we should have the naval militia organized. I ask that the bill be passed with a few House committee amendments.

Mr. HAY. Reserving the right to object, does this bill provide for any pay to the naval militia?

Mr. PADGETT. It does not. We passed the bill in the last Congress, with the difference that in this bill we have placed limitations upon it that were not in the bill that was passed at that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON and others objected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Two or three gentlemen have objected; and as we can not pass any bills, the Chair will state that the House made a special order that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] should have 40 minutes and that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] should have 40 minutes. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has had his 40 minutes, and then some.

ALASKA NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Will not the Speaker recognize me to make a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 28731) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear some statement.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, this bill is almost identical with one that was passed in the last Congress at just about this time in the session. It went to the President early in the morning of the day that we adjourned, and he did not sign it. The Secretary of the Interior objected to it. The bill has now been amended so as to meet the objections that were then made, and there is no objection on the part of the Secretary of the Interior to its passage.

The Alaska Northern Railway Co. have built 72 miles of railroad. They have made a preliminary survey for the route from Seward up through the Territory to Fairbanks, several hundred miles. The time in which they can file a map of definite location has expired under the law. This bill extends the time in which they can file the map of definite location. They have gone to an expense of some $250,000 in making the preliminary survey, and it will cost several hundred thousand dollars more to make the maps of definite location.

The last bill provided that if the Government wanted hereafter to take over the road, either by purchase or condemnation, that there should be nothing paid to the railroad company for the right of way which the Government grants over that part of the road that had been constructed at the time of the purchase. Now, this amendment provides that if the Government hereafter takes the road from them by purchase or condemnation it shall pay nothing for the right of way; that the right of way that we grant shall not be reckoned as an element of value.

The other bill provided the right of way over which the road had been constructed at the time of the condemnation proceedings, and this provided that we shall pay nothing for the right of way after the passage of this act; that is, any of the right of way beyond the 72 miles.

This gives them three years to file the maps of definite location. If we should conclude to purchase, the maps will be of great value to the Government. The original maps of the survey have been filed with the Government, and they are of great value. The time of filing the maps of definite location has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the Secretary of the Interior recommended the passage of this bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The Secretary told me that the objection he had to the passage of the bill was this: The road runs from Seward 72 miles. From there it proposes to run up to the Yukon. The Secretary thought that if the Government wanted to build a road it would not use that part of the road that is now constructed, but would go from a point on Cooks Inlet over to the terminus of the road, and go thence over the route that the railroad had mapped out in the preliminary survey. So he thought that if we were going to make any provision for the future for the purchase of this road there ought to be a provision that we should pay for none of the right of way we had granted over the 72 miles or be obligated to buy the section.

Since then the Alaskan Railway Commission has been up there making investigations, and they found the route that the Secretary had in his mind was thoroughly impractical, and that the Government would have to go over the road as operated, and so the Secretary withdrew his objection. So, when we amended the bill, he told me over the phone that that eliminated any objection he had to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Is there a report on the bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; there is a report giving the history of all the transactions.

Mr. LENROOT. Is there any recommendation by the Secretary?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No; there is not.

Mr. LENROOT. When was the bill introduced?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. On the 11th of February. There was a bill identical with this that was introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington with this exception, that it carried a provision in it exempting the railroad from taxation.

He soon realized that the Committee on Territories would not stand for that, and so the Delegate introduced a bill leaving that section out, which was identical with the bill that had passed the House and the Senate unanimously last session. We amended it by striking out the last three lines, as follows:

As to any part of said right of way upon or over which said railroad shall not be actually constructed at the time of such purchase or condemnation.

Of course we want railroads in Alaska if we can get them. I do not know whether the Government will ever undertake to build them or not, but if we do the Government's rights are secured by the bill. If there is any way to encourage these people to build the road, I think it would be desirable. They think that if they can get this extension they will be able to finance the road.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Why was the bill not referred to the Secretary of the Interior for report?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It was.

Mr. MANN. Where is the report?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The original bill was referred to the Interior Department for report.

Mr. MANN. Where is the report?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. This bill that contains the section that I spoke of——

Mr. MANN. Which bill was that?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is the bill introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]. It had this section in it——

Mr. MANN. What is the number of it?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. That is not very much information to give one.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It had this section exempting the railroad from taxation. The Secretary reported on that unfavorably and, at my request, came before the committee and made his objections to the committee. He stated to the committee that the objection he had to the bill that was passed at the last session was very largely removed, for the reason I have just indicated. That bill did not have this objectionable section exempting the land from taxation.

The Delegate, Mr. WICKERSHAM, then immediately introduced this bill, leaving out that section. The committee acted upon it, and with this amendment I sent the report and the bill to the Secretary of the Interior and had a conversation with him over the telephone. He said that he had no objection to it as it was reported, and for that reason there is no written report upon this particular bill. The bill that he reported on unfavorably was not reported by the committee, but the objections were met in this one.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that this bill, or almost the same bill, passed the House and the Senate at the last session of the last Congress?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. At the last session.

Mr. MANN. And received a pocket veto by President Taft?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. On the advice of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman say he sent this bill to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes; with the report.

Mr. MANN. Where is the reply from the Secretary of the Interior upon the bill?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It was made to me over the telephone, as I just stated a moment ago.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask why the usual course was not followed? There is usually a written report or a letter from the Secretary. I do not question the gentleman's statement, of course.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I undertook to explain why. The written report was made on a bill identical with this with the exception that it contained a section exempting the road fram taxation.

Mr. MANN. Why was not that report included in the report of the committee?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Because that bill was never reported to the House.

Mr. MANN. But that report that is on the same or a similar bill could have been included in the report upon this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. But this is not a similar bill. Then the Secretary came before the committee and made this statement to the committee, and we eliminated the objectionable parts, and the Delegate the very next day introduced this bill, and we took this one up instead of the other one and struck out those words, which met all the objections that had been urged.

Mr. NELSON. Why can not this go over until the next Congress?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I have assurances that if this bill is passed to-night by this House it will be passed by the Senate in the course of an hour or so, and I believe unquestionably that it will be approved by the President.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I say frankly that I can see no possible objection to the passage of the bill on its terms. It seems to safeguard any interest that the Government would have. I doubt whether any company will ever operate under this anyway. I thought it was strange that there was not a report from the Secretary of the Interior, especially in view of the known opinion of the present Secretary that it would be or might be wise for the Government itself to construct some railroads up there.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, that is the opinion of the present Secretary, I think. In the first place, in the bill of 1906, which gave the extension to the Alaska Central, there was some provision in it which gave that road, upon the completion of the road, title to property up there; so we put a proviso in there that nothing in the act should be construed or held to have the effect of renewing or reviving any grant of title to the railroad under the act of June 30, 1906, or any subsequent act which might have already lapsed or become forfeited.

Mr. ANDERSON. The gentleman does not believe this would interfere with the Government building a road up there if it is desirable?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LENROOT. Upon the assurance of the gentleman that the bill in its present form is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. It is not objected to by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LENROOT. Otherwise I should feel constrained to object; but upon the gentleman's assurance that it is satisfactory to the Secretary I will not do so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I had a talk with the Secretary over the telephone, and he told me that this proviso has eliminated his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 28731) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for filing the map and maps of definite location of the Alaska Northern Railway, formerly known as the Alaska Central Railway, of its branches, station grounds and terminal grounds, and junction and division terminals provided and required by the act entitled "An act for extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, both within and without reservations and withdrawals, be, and the same hereby is, extended until three years after the passage of this act, and the time for completing the railway is hereby extended until two years after the filing of said maps; and leave is hereby granted to the Alaska Northern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to file said map and maps of definite location within the time and the times therefor as above provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to have the effect of renewing or reviving any grant of title to real estate under the act of June 30, 1906, or any subsequent act which may have already lapsed or become forfeited: Provided further, That in case the United States shall at any time desire to acquire, by purchase or condemnation proceedings, said railroad, the extension herein made and the right of way secured thereby shall not be deemed or held to constitute any asset or value owned by said Alaska Northern Railway Co., its assigns or successors, above actual cost of the survey and locations thereof, as to any part of said right of way upon or over which said railroad shall not be actually constructed at the time of such purchase or condemnation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that the committee amendment be agreed to, to strike out lines 19, 20, and 21 on page 2.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS ON WATERWAYS.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD an address made by Representative RANSDELL, of Louisiana, on the subject of waterways before the Boston Chamber of Commerce on the 15th of last February.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a speech made by Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana on the subject of waterways. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

Address of Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, Senator elect from Louisiana and president of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, on "The interest of Boston in improved waterways" at the annual dinner of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Copley-Plaza Hotel, Saturday, February 15, 1913.

THE INTEREST OF BOSTON IN IMPROVED WATERWAYS.

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Boston Chamber of Commerce: I appear before you this evening in my double capacity as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives and as president of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress for the purpose of discussing the interest of your great city and State in improved waterways. I have devoted many years of study and hard work to this subject, and the organization of which I have the honor to be head is bending every effort to secure the proper improvement of every worthy water course in the land which is justified by the needs of commerce, present or prospective.

This organization is composed of boards of trade, commercial bodies, waterway associations, and private persons in every part of the Republic. It does not advocate any project whatsoever, no matter how worthy, but stands for a liberal, comprehensive policy of waterway improvement similar to that which has been in vogue in Germany for years. We know that transportation by water is much cheaper than by rail and that improved waterways are the best possible regulators of freight rates. We have far more confidence in competition on the unmonopolized waterways of the land—nature's free highways, established when the world was made, and used by mankind for thousands of years before railroads were dreamed of—than we have in man-made statutes or commissions.

PANAMA CANAL AND FREIGHT RATES.

We have neglected our waters very much in the rapid progress of the past half century, and many of us have grown to believe that there is no real useful transportation agent except railroads. This is a great mistake, and it is gratifying to note that waterway sentiment is reviving. Much impetus has been given to it recently in every part of the Union through the efforts of waterway organizations and the dissemination of literature intended to give correct information in regard to the benefits of water transportation. The greatest interest has been aroused by the rapid progress of work on the Panama Canal, for it is realized that this connecting link between the oceans will have a wonderful influence in reducing freight rates between the eastern and western seaboard, as well as throughout our vast interior.

An incident which indicates the benefits which will result when the canal is opened and our own waterways are given dependable channels occurred a few months ago. A shipment of goods, composed partly of barley and partly of canned fruits, was taken from San Francisco to Panama, transferred from ship to train and hauled across the Isthmus to Colon, transferred from the train to another ship and carried to New Orleans and there transferred a third time to a barge, in which it was taken up the Mississippi to St. Louis. Even with all these intermediate rehandlings the freight on this single barge load of goods was $2,000 less than it would have cost to send it from San Francisco to St. Louis by rail.

WONDERFUL COMMERCE ON GREAT LAKES.

Another instance of the effects of this canal is cited by Col. W. M. Black, of the United States Engineers Corps, in a recent report on the Hudson River. He estimates that Oregon lumber can be shipped via the Panama Canal, the Hudson River, the Erie Canal, and the Great Lakes to the city of Chicago, allowing one transshipment, at from $8 to $12 per 1,000 feet board measure less than by rail directly from Oregon to Chicago across the Rockies. Of course, Boston would derive infinitely greater benefit in proportion than Chicago, especially if the harbors and rivers along the Pacific coast are well improved.

The most striking instance of waterway commerce on which accurate statistics are obtainable is that through the St. Marys River, connecting Lakes Huron and Superior. During the year 1911 this commerce amounted to 53,477,216 tons, which was carried an average distance of 826 miles at a freight charge of sixty-seven hundredths of 1 mill per ton per mile, making the total amount of freight collected on that colossal volume of commerce $29,492,196. The average freight charged by all the railroads of the Union that year was 7.57 mills, or more than eleven times the water charge. Had this commerce through the St. Marys River (not the whole commerce of the Lakes, but merely that passing from Huron to Superior, and vice versa) been carried by rail at the average railroad rates, the charge thereon would have been about $325,000,000, or $295,000,000 in excess of what was actually paid. In other words, the improvements of the Great Lakes, especially those at the St. Marys River, which have cost the Government about $21,000,000, saved the American people in 1911 in reduced freight charges the colossal sum of $295,000,000.

The effect in Boston of the channel depth of 35 feet in its harbor, which cost $6,000,000 and is rapidly nearing completion, is very great. I have no doubt that the reduction in freights caused by it exceeds every year the total cost of the improvements. The general manager of the principal foreign steamship line entering Boston states "That freight rates caused by the larger steamers being used as a result of the deeper channel are about 50 per cent less than they were some 15 or 20 years ago when very much smaller steamers were engaged in the trade. This saving of one-half of the cost of ocean transportation at a great port like Boston is of vital importance to the Nation. It benefits the wheat grower of the Middle West, the cotton planter of the South, and every one who exports or imports articles of commerce.

GROWTH OF LAKE AND RIVER CITIES.

A striking illustration of the effects of thoroughly improved waters is furnished by a comparison of five river cities with five lake cities in the United States. In the former class are Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, and Memphis, and in the latter Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, and Chicago. In 1870 the population of the five river cities was 307,000. In 1910 these cities had increased to a population of 1,940,000, the rate of increase being about 140 per cent. In 1870 the population of the five lake cities was approximately 160,000, being 147,000 less than the population of the five river cities at that date. In 1910 the total population of the five lake cities was 4,009,000, the rate of increase for the lake cities being 507 per cent, or more than three and one-half times the rate of increase of the five river cities.

In 1870 St. Louis was larger than Chicago, but a few years later Chicago became her rival and is now more than three times as populous. Cincinnati was for years the largest city and most important commercial point in Ohio. She is now behind Cleveland, Buffalo, Detroit, and Milwaukee. The enormous growth of these lake cities has resulted in a congested condition of their railroad terminals. The railroads touching the lake cities and other great water harbors are the most important and prosperous in the country. All of them do a fine business. In my judgment, the rapid growth of these lake cities is due mainly to the deep water in their harbors and on the various connecting channels through the Great Lakes which have increased in depth from 10 to 12 feet in 1880 to about 20 feet at the present time. But while transportation conditions on the Lakes have improved wonderfully, those on the rivers have remained stationary or gone backward. The river channels, as a rule, are no better than they were 40 years ago, and the commerce is smaller, and this is due largely to the failure of the Government to improve the rivers at the same pace as the lakes and ocean ports.

WATERWAY DEVELOPMENT IN GERMANY.

Our country could well emulate the example of Germany, which has take a most advanced stand in improving its waterways. Many writers think that to this cause more than to any other is due the commanding position occupied by Germany to-day in the world of commerce. It is possible to carry freight from every part of Germany to every other part by water at rates much lower than railroad rates. Not only is this true, but the German waterways are protected by wise legislation from unfair rail competition and are used very extensively, enormous volumes of freight being moved by water. Moreover, the Germans have paid the strictest attention to terminals, and every device of engineering skill is provided for handling freight to and from water and land carriers at all the principal harbors and many river points.

Let me cite a notable instance: "The city of Hamburg began to develop her port about 1860, increasing it from a 6-foot depth to its present depth of about 26 feet at low water. The commerce of Hamburg in 1870 amounted to about 2,000,000 tons, and by 1907 it had grown to 20,812,000 tons. That shows the marvelous increase in Hamburg's commerce following the improvement of the Elbe River. It has cost the city or State of Hamburg about $15,000,000 to increase its channel facilities from the sea, 85 miles distant, and in addition about $45,000,000 to provide harbor facilities after they had made their channel; so that in all the city or State of Hamburg has spent over $60,000,000 to develop its commerce from 2,000,000 to 20,000,000 tons, and the city of Hamburg has grown from a population of something like 453,869 in 1880 to about 900,000—equal to something over half that of the Boston metropolitan district." I commend this example to you and earnestly hope your great city will do likewise.

VAST IMPORTANCE OF TERMINALS.

You are preparing to expend quite a large sum on terminals, and you can well afford it, for without proper terminal facilities it is needless for the Government to deepen and enlarge your harbor. It is not pleasant for me to tell you that you are not up to date so far as terminals are concerned. Let me quote briefly from page 20 of the report of the National Waterways Commission, filed March 25, 1912: "Undoubtedly the most essential requirement for the preservation and advancement of water transportation is the establishment of adequate terminals properly controlled. Under the present conditions the advantage of cheaper transportation which the waterways afford is largely nullified by the lack of such terminals."

According to the report of the commissioner of corporations on water terminals, private interests control nearly all the available water front in this country, not only at the various seaports but also along the Great Lakes and the principal rivers. Only two ports in the United States—New Orleans and San Francisco—have established a public control of terminals at all comparable with the municipal supervision existing at most European ports.

FINE TERMINALS AT NEW ORLEANS.

The above-mentioned reports on water terminals also show that a large proportion of the most available water frontage is owned or controlled by railway corporations. Through this ownership or control they practically dominate the terminal situation at most of our ports, and they have generally exercised their control in a manner adverse to water traffic. In many cases they hold large tracts of undeveloped frontage which they refuse to sell or lease, and which are needed for the construction of public docks. This railway control of terminals is one of the most serious obstacles to the development of water transportation, for the control of the terminal means practically the control of the route.

An independent boat line has small chance of success where it is denied the use of docks and terminal facilities or is required to pay unreasonable charges for their use. The high terminal charges at many of our ports make it impossible for small boat lines to enter at all.

Let me beg of you, my Boston friends, to see that this criticism shall not long apply to your great city. Bear in mind that you must not expect the National Government to legislate in regard to terminals, which is a local matter and one you must handle in your own way through State and municipal laws.

It gives me much pleasure to commend to your especial notice the terminal situation at New Orleans, the principal city of my State and the South. A careful examination thereof will give you some admirable ideas which may be most beneficial to you. The people of the Crescent City will welcome you with open arms, and, if they can assist you in solving this serious problem, it will give them much happiness.

I can not say too much on the importance of this subject of terminals. Every great city in the Nation is aroused in regard to it. At New York the terminal situation is attracting the greatest attention. In 1910 I was informed that one great railroad owned or controlled 250 wharves or docks at Chesapeake Bay points. Think what immense power such ownership and control gives to that road. It is not right; it is not for the public good; and the various communities should under power of eminent domain take possession of at least a sufficient number of these wharves and docks to serve all comers by land and water on equal terms. And a similar policy should be pursued everywhere.

Recently waterway legislation in Congress has been very advanced. Section 11 of the Panama Canal act, passed last year, prohibits any railroad on and after July 1, 1914, from owning directly or indirectly or leasing or controlling any water carrier with which said road does or may compete for commerce. This act also gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission power (a) to establish physical connection between rail and water and by making railroads construct connections from their lines to docks where same is reasonable and is justified by the business to be handled; (b) to establish through routes and maximum joint rates between such water and rail, and determine terms and conditions of handling same; (c) to establish maximum proportional rates by rail to and from ports to which traffic is brought or from which it is taken by the water carrier, and to determine through what traffic and in connection with what vessels and upon what terms and conditions such rates shall apply.

These provisions are very far-reaching. Undoubtedly efforts will be made to amend them and lessen their effect. I appeal to the solid business men of this city to study them, to prepare yourselves to defend them, and to insist upon their being carried out to the letter, for they mean more than any laws enacted in recent years toward cheapening transportation rates.

CHEAPER RAW MATERIALS.

No portion of the Union is more interested in the wise, business-like improvement of our waterways than is Massachusetts and Boston. I question if any one of our States has fewer of the raw products needed for its manufactories than Massachusetts, though in that greatest of all natural resources, human brains, it is no flattery to say that if not the leader you are certainly well in the vanguard. Your wealth comes through your splendid factories, which draw their cotton, wool, steel, hides, lumber, and almost everything one can think about from every part of the Nation, indeed from all over the world, to be converted into the finished product and shipped to all climes for the use of all mankind. It is essential that you get the raw materials cheap and that you are able to distribute manufactured articles quickly and cheaply.

It is said that transportation enters into the life of everyone. It deeply concerns the food we eat, the clothing which covers us, and the houses which shelter us from winter's snow and summer's heat. In the item of coal, one of the greatest necessaries of life, transportation is all important, for while the people near the mines are able to buy their coal for a song, those living a long distance away are charged with high prices, not for the coal but for the freight rates paid to transportation agents. The same is true with wheat, corn, and other food products, which are usually very much cheaper on the farms where produced than in the markets where consumed. The item of freight on a bushel of wheat from the plains of the Dakotas or the great wheat region of eastern Oregon and Washington to the Boston consumer is a most important one, which adds greatly to the cost of the article.

Transportation is a fixed charge which can not be avoided, but which may be reduced. It is not a producer but a consumer—the greediest and most ruthless of all consumers. It is a tax which reaches every article used by man except the ether of heaven. Moreover, it is the heaviest tax by long odds that we have to pay—greater than all other taxes combined. In the fiscal year 1901–2 the receipts of railroads in the United States exceeded by one hundred and thirty millions the combined revenue receipts of towns, cities, counties, political subdivisions, Territories, and States, and including the National Government itself, from all sources.

There is no more important question in the commercial world, nor will there ever be one more important, than that of transportation, and the state or nation which solves it quickest and best is sure to win in the race for commercial supremacy.

EFFECT ON NEW ENGLAND.

Some may ask what interest has Massachusetts in the improvement of the Great Lakes system, or the big rivers of the Mississippi, Missouri-Ohio system, or the great Columbia in the far West, or the protection of the lower Mississippi Valley from the floods which so frequently devastate its richest lands? Why should Massachusetts and New England contribute to all these projects? They are thousands of miles from any of them; their own waterways are well improved; why not let other communities look out for themselves? I will try to answer a few of these questions.

When the Empire State of New York constructed out of State funds the Erie Canal, which was completed in 1825, freight rates were greatly reduced as far west as Chicago and as far south as Memphis. There was a material reduction, amounting to several cents a bushel, on wheat and everything else in proportion, and Massachusetts received the benefit as well as New York. When the Government expended large sums to deepen the Detroit River between Lakes Huron and Erie and to make connection between Lakes Superior and Huron, it enabled the iron ore on the west shores of Superior to be conveyed to factories around Pittsburgh and at the head of Lake Erie at one-tenth of the average railroad rates, thereby cheapening iron and steel and all the products thereof. Rates on grain, flour, lumber, copper, etc., were reduced in the same relative proportion. Massachusetts consumes a vast quantity of all these articles. The Erie Canal is now being enlarged to a depth of 12 feet at a cost of $101,000,000 by the efforts of the people of New York, and this canal, together with the Great Lakes, enables Massachusetts to send its manifold manufactured products on a westward journey by water, nearly 1,500 miles, at water rates very much below the average railroad rates. The cities along that canal and the Great Lakes are populous, wealthy, prosperous. They consume a large amount of goods made by your factories, and because of improved waterways you are able to deliver those goods at freight rates much below those you pay to inland points which are served by railroads alone.

A project is being rapidly prosecuted to improve the Columbia River, which reaches into the eastern parts of Oregon and Washington, and through its main affluent, the Snake, into Idaho. The second greatest wheat-growing region in the Union is in this section, and when the Columbia is properly improved wheat can be carried to the Pacific coast at a saving of 4 to 5 cents per bushel over the rates now paid to railroads. Thence it can go through the Panama Canal and on by sea to Boston, giving your people the benefit of cheaper wheat. If there were nothing else, the saving on the enormous wheat crop of that region would justify the improvement. But many other articles in which you are interested, most particularly wool, can be carried down that river at low rates, and your products by sea through the Panama Canal, thence to Portland, and far into the interior through the Columbia and Snake, will find a better market than they now enjoy when confined to a rail trip across the continent.

IN THE WEST.

We are expending about $63,000,000 to give a minimum depth of 9 feet in the Ohio from Pittsburgh to Cairo. At its head is the great city of Pittsburgh, the largest freight center on earth, for it is said that the freight tonnage of Pittsburgh is greater than the combined tonnage of New York, London, Antwerp, and Hongkong. This sounds big, but I believe it is literally true, for the vast majority of Pittsburgh's commerce is coal, iron ore, and the products of iron and steel, the weight of which counts up very rapidly, though in value the Pittsburgh tonnage does not amount to anything like that of some of the other cities.

Below Pittsburgh and along the Ohio there is a perfect beehive of industry and population. This region is a great human workshop which is contributing wonderfully to the national wealth and every portion of the Union is deeply interested in its welfare. According to the testimony of Col. Sibert, a member of the Panama Canal Commission, coal can move down the improved Ohio, thence down the Mississippi, at rates about one-tenth to one-eleventh the average railroad rate. Much of this freight would naturally be destined to Atlantic coast points, especially Boston. What more natural than to send your products by sea to New Orleans, thence up the Mississippi and Ohio to those wealthy, prosperous people? You make many things that they need, just as they in turn make some things which you need. There should be mutual exchange, mutual interest, mutual benefit, between Massachusetts and this splendid section by water, the cheapest of all known methods of transportation.

MISSISSIPPI FLOODS.

But what of the floods on the lower Mississippi River? In this matter you come very close to me individually, my friends, for I live on the banks of the Mississippi in the town of Lake Providence, in the extreme northeastern Louisiana. My home is in the very heart of that great section so often visited by disastrous floods. Last year my own plantation was inundated and I lost heavily. The people of my congressional district suffered a loss of several millions of dollars by these floods, and throughout the valley from Cairo to the Gulf the damages were enormous. These disasters were caused by the accumulated rainfall of 24 States. You will be surprised to know that parts of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, and Georgia, along the Atlantic coast, send their rain water into the Mississippi.

Literally all the waters betwen the Alleghenies on the east and the Rockies on the west find their outlet through this giant stream, which has been well called the Nation's sewer or drainage ditch. A portion of the Dominion of Canada drains to the Gulf through the Mississippi. When the floods rise in the spring they present an overpowering force and the States and local communities are unable to cope with them. They frequently break over the artificial barriers along the banks of the river, called levees, destroy live stock, crops, houses, fences, improvements of all kinds, and sometimes even human lives are forfeited to them.

It is fair and just for the Nation to control its flood waters, and as they are caused in this valley by rains throughout a very large portion of the Union, it is the duty of Congress to prevent them from destroying lives and property, or at least to assist materially therein. In the overflow section of the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau, Mo., on both sides of the river to the Gulf, especially in southeastern Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, there are about 28,000 square miles of land subject to flood water, or about 18,000,000 acres. These lowlands are equal to the combined area of your own Commonwealth, together with Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, and Maryland. There is no more fertile soil on earth than this delta, composed of the washings from the hillsides and valleys of 24 States; it has well been called the geologic cream of the American Continent. Most of it is especially well adapted to producing long-staple cotton of the variety so popular in the mills of Massachusetts. At the present time less than 5,000,000 acres of this delta land are in cultivation, a portion of wihch in lower Louisiana is planted in sugar cane. Upward of 10,000,000 additional acres, if protected from floods, could readily be planted in long-staple cotton and other crops, thereby increasing very largely the yield of that product and giving to the New England mills at reduced price a surplus which they need so badly, for now you are compelled to buy much long-staple cotton of inferior variety in Egypt.

MASSACHUSETTS MAN PLANTER.

Some of your wisest men are awake to this subject. Not long ago Mr. William B. Plunkett, president of the Berkshire Cotton Co., of Adams, Mass., bought a large cotton plantation in the Yazoo Delta, Miss., and more recently he purchased 5,000 acres in the same section for the growth of long-staple cotton. Many of you know Mr. Plunkett. You are aware that his company turns out a million yards of cotton cloth a week and that he is one of your most progressive and successful business men. He appreciates how important it is for his mills to raise their own cotton.

Several years ago an English syndicate purchased 30,000 acres in the same Yazoo Delta to raise cotton for their English mills, and within the last 10 days, according to newspaper accounts, another English company, at a cost of $2,000,000, purchased 25,000 acres of this land near Vicksburg, Miss., on which to produce long-staple cotton. Surely you wide-awake New Englanders are not going to let your British rivals secure all of this land which the Southern people are willing to sell. You are going to see that it is protected from floods by Uncle Sam. You are going to realize that the problem of flood protection on that river vitally concerns you and insist upon its solution promptly and effectively. You are going to see that 10,000,000 additional acres of this fertile valley are placed under the plow and are planted in staple cotton, corn, cereals, hay, etc., and much of it is going to be owned by New Englanders and handled by New England capital. You are going to appreciate that while the Southern States are now manufacturing a very large part of their great cotton crop, as a rule they produce only the coarser fabrics out of the short-staple cotton and the high-grade more expensive articles are made in New England and foreign lands out of the long-staple varieties. Protect the Mississippi Valley from these awful floods and it will produce not only the long-staple cotton you need in New England, but enough for the entire world, and under the well-known laws of supply and demand, if the supply be much increased, the price will be reduced.

THE GREAT HEART OF NEW ENGLAND.

But aside from reasons of business and strict justice, I appeal to the great heart of New England, which has never failed to answer such a call to assist with all its might the people of this wonderful valley—the richest jewel in our national diadem—in shielding their lives and property from its terrible waters, in subduing its canebrakes and forests to the plow and scythe, and in producing on its fertile fields food for millions and the world's supply of long-staple cotton.

In a broad way, it may be said that Massachusetts is interested in all the important waterway projects in the Nation, for these improvements mean cheaper transportation and greater prosperity to their respective localities, and whatever tends to build up and improve any part of the Republic is bound to help New England. This Nation is a mighty whole, each part or section being closely allied to and to a great extent dependent upon every other section. The prosperity and success of one means the same thing to the other. The prosperity of one is good for all, and no portion can suffer without the other part feeling it.

It gives me the greatest pleasure to testify to the splendid work of your Representatives and Senators in looking after all the waterway projects of your State. While comparisons are always odious, I trust I may be permitted to pay a merited tribute to my long-time colleague and friend GEORGE P. LAWRENCE, who has been a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee ever since I entered Congress, 14 years ago. He has never failed to look after every interest of Massachusetts and New England, and his efforts were always loyally supported by his colleagues in both parties in the Senate and House, for the question of waterway improvement has never been a political one. During my 12 years' service as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee I have never once heard the word "politics" within the walls of that great committee room. Each project is discussed upon its merits and treated accordingly.

As I understand the situation, every New England project, without exception, which has met the approval of the Engineer Corps of the Army within the past 15 years has been amply provided for, with the possible exception of Sandy Bay Harbor of Refuge. Some years ago that work was held back somewhat by the overshadowing necessities of Boston Harbor, but of late appropriations have not been given, because its engineers in their reports have asked Congress to defer action until the effect of storms, winds, and waves upon the structure already there might be more thoroughly tested.

METHOD ADOPTED BY CONGRESS.

Like all things, however, in this rapid and most progressive age, your State will present other projects from time to time. It is expected that the 35-foot channel in Boston Harbor will be completed within a year. The entire $8,000,000 which it was estimated it would cost has been appropriated or authorized. Realizing that there was demand for a still deeper and possibly wider channel, the Rivers and Harbors Committee, without waiting for the completion of the present project, has ordered a new survey of the channel from Charlestown Navy Yard to the sea, and it is thought that the result may be a favorable report for a 40-foot channel. This will involve a large additional expenditure, for it means deep-sea rock excavation, which is very expensive. Nevertheless, the great importance of the port of Boston is so generally recognized and the public spirit that is shown by the people of Massachusetts themselves in their own very large expenditures make it certain that Congress will hereafter provide all appropriations recommended by the engineers.

Apropos of this last remark, I wish to explain briefly how projects to improve waterways are inaugurated. In the first place, Congress passes a law ordering the Engineer Corps of the United States Army to make a survey of the proposed improvement. The local engineer in charge makes a preliminary examination thereof and reports thereon to the division engineer, who orders an accurate survey. When this survey is completed the local engineer sends his report to the division engineer, who in turn examines it and forwards his report to a board of seven engineers in the city of Washington known as the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. This board critically examines all the reports relating to the improvement and in addition thereto gives hearings to interested parties, sometimes quite a large number of witnesses being heard. The report of this board is then made to the Chief of Engineers of the Army, and if his report thereon be favorable the matter is referred to Congress for action. And there is an unwritten law that unless the project be reported upon with favor either by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors or by the Chief of Engineers it shall not be considered at all by the committee of Congress.

FAIRNESS THE WATCHWORD.

Thus it will be seen that before a waterway project has standing before Congress, permitting it to be appropriated for, it must first run the gantlet of the local United States engineer, the division engineer, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and the Chief of Engineers, all of whom are graduates of West Point, men, as a rule, without any local interest in the project and men who are of high character and great intellectuality. These engineers are the honor men of West Point, their positions are assured for life, they are independent financially, as they retire on a good pension before reaching old age, and whenever any project receives their approval it certainly has a great deal of merit.

People who talk about pork-barrel appropriations in connection with waterways seem to forget the important and essential preliminary steps connected with all such appropriations. How can human ingenuity devise a method to safeguard appropriations in any better way than this? I can not conceive of it. Mistakes, of course, occur sometimes, but they are few and far between. And let me remind you in this connection that the criticism leveled at river and harbor appropriations is always of a general character. The critics never present a bill of particulars. They talk about pork barrel, but they do not show in which respect any pork is dispensed. They talk about appropriations being made to aid some Member of Congress to be reelected, but they invariably fail to detail the facts and circumstances connected therewith. Please bear this in mind when you read such criticisms and insist for this great subject the same degree of fairness accorded the ordinary criminal, who is entitled to be served with a copy of the indictment, specifically setting forth the charge against him and to be confronted with the witnesses in order that he may cross-question them. Waterway appropriations have many sinister foes who fight in the dark and try to poison the well of public opinion in order to reap selfish benefits thereby.

In conclusion, I beg of my hearers to study water transportation. Bear in mind that the people are the owners of the waterways just as they are of the highways. All navigable waters are free and can never be monopolized. The poor man in his little boat or canoe can use them just as the rich man in his floating palace. There may be steamboat trusts or ship trusts, which at times and to some extent monopolize water traffic, but it is certain that they can never control the watercourse—the roadbed on which their vessels ply—and that is a terrible handicap to them. While the waterways belong to the people, the railroads, their great rivals and competitors, are owned and operated by individuals and corporations for private benefit. There should be no rivalry between the various modes of transportation, for there is business enough and profit enough for all. The three great agents of transportation—highways, railways, and waterways—should be complements, one of the other, and the friends of all three should cooperate to see that each gets everything it is entitled to and is not deprived of its rights and privileges.

EVAN URNER RINEHART.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 7267), and move to discharge the Committee on Naval Affairs from the further consideration of the bill and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 7267) waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart.

Be it enacted, etc., That the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy be, and it is hereby, waived for one year in the case of Evan Urner Rinehart in consideration of his previous naval service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have stated to the gentleman from Maryland on various occasions several times to-night I would have to object to this bill, and he knew that perfectly well, and I do object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

The Chair is going to call those gentlemen who applied for suspension of the rules.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from the further consideration of the bill (S. 7723), to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask if the bill is here. We can not act upon it unless it is here.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not here.

Mr. MANN. We have to have the Senate engrossed copy of the bill before we can act on it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois lies and I would like to be heard for a moment. The motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to suspend the rules and pass this bill, and under the rules the Speaker of the House was required to refer the bill to the District of Columbia Committee because it makes a charge upon the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. That is the trouble about it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Under the rules the bill could not be here, but it is in order to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill. This matter was all taken up this morning with the parliamentarian of the House and gone over thoroughly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could move to suspend the rules if we had an engrossed copy of the bill here.

Mr. LAFFERTY. You can suspend the rules and pass a bill written on a sheet of foolscap.

Mr. MANN. But you can not pass a Senate bill written on a sheet of foolscap in the House.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senate bill has now come to the House and is in the possession of a committee of the House.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know how you get the bill back here.

Mr. LENROOT. By discharging the committee that has jurisdiction.

Mr. MANN. But the bill has to be produced.

Mr. LENROOT. Constructively the bill will be on the Speaker's table or in possession of the House.

The SPEAKER. But actually it is not.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that if this bill has been referred from the Speaker's desk to the Committee on the District of Columbia, it is in the possession of the House to such an extent that a motion to suspend the rules and discharge the committee is in order; for otherwise, Mr. Speaker, it would never be possible to discharge a committee, because the bill physically is properly in the possession of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the physical possession of the bill on the Speaker's desk would give no more jurisdiction than if it were not there at all.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman seems to think that you can read some other paper up there. The very motion of the gentleman requires a Senate bill to be read from the Clerk's desk; and there is only one copy, and that is the engrossed copy of the Senate bill—a certified copy. There never has been a case since I have been a Member of the House when any bill was permitted to be passed where the original papers were not there. Any paper is original House bill paper, of course.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] whether the possession of a paper, if it is not properly in the possession of the Clerk, is any possession at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] what we are going to pass.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. Where is it?

Mr. LENROOT. It is in the possession of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. How can the House know what is in the Senate bill unless it is read?

Mr. MANN. It has to be read as part of the motion.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I would suggest, if that be true, that it does not go to the extent of entertaining the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not know but that the engrossed copy of the bill was here until the fact was ascertained.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to suggest to the Chair it could not be properly here under any circumstances except upon a report of the committee.

Mr. MANN. If anybody had possession of it, it would be here.

The SPEAKER. Yesterday it turned out that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HAMLIN, got a bill passed here that the Chair himself introduced—his own bill—and it was passed, and then the House started in on another one that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BARTHOLDT, introduced, and the fact developed that we did not have an engrossed copy of either one of them here. So the matter was vacated, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HAMLIN, sent upstairs to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and got the engrossed copies of both bills, and they were passed. The House ought to know what is in a bill.

Mr. LENROOT. If I may make just one more statement——

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to this particular bill, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia was requested to return the bill to the Clerk's desk and refused to do so.

The SPEAKER. He had a perfect right to do that.

Mr. LENROOT. He certainly did; but if that be the proper procedure the chairman of any committee can defeat the will of the House with reference to a suspension of the rules in discharging a committee, and that is a very common practice——

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair ask the gentleman a question. Does not the gentleman think it would be very dangerous practice to pass a bill if the House did not know what was in it?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what this request amounts to.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I would like to be heard for just a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for just a minute, until I can ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] a question? What does this bill contain?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It is the woman's eight-hour bill for the District of Columbia. It provides an eight-hour workday for certain classes of female employees in the District.

Mr. DYER. When did it go to the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Two or three days ago.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, the records of this House show, and the records in the immediate possession of the Speaker also show, that that bill, Senate bill 7723, an act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia, passed the Senate and came to the House and was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Now, if the Chair is going to hold that the motion to discharge the committee and pass the bill is out of order because the bill is not physically present in engrossed copy, I will ask to be recognized to move simply that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill, which will authorize us to send over and get the bill from the chairman of the committee. And in that connection I desire to read the following request:

Hon. BEN JOHNSON,
Chairman Committee on District of Columbia.

DEAR SIR: We desire to move to suspend the rules and pass S. 7723. Judge Crisp says it will be necessary to have the engrossed copy on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman just said he did not.

Mr. LAFFERTY. That was after this came back. I read further:

If you will please send same over to Judge Crisp at once by this page, we will greatly appreciate it.

A. W. LAFFERTY.
HENRY ALLEN COOPER.
C. R. DAVIS.
WILLIAM KENT.

That is indorsed on the back as follows:

The bill has been referred to the District Committee. The committee alone can report it to the House. The committee must act upon it.
Respectfully,

BEN JOHNSON.

But the printed copies of the Senate bill in the document room, the copy which the gentleman has sent down to the Speaker's desk, should be recognized and read as the Senate bill upon a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. There could not be any question about the authenticity of the copies.

The SPEAKER. Why should there not be?

Mr. LAFFERTY. It is a Government document.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not contend that all Government documents are authentic, does he?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I will read from this document. It is indorsed as follows:

Sixty-second Congress, third session. S. 7723. In the House of Representatives. March 1, 1913. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

It is indorsed at the end as follows:

Passed the Senate February 27, 1913.
Attest:

CHARLES G. BENNETT, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. That is the printed copy?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes; that is the printed copy, presented by a Member of the House of Representatives as being furnished to the Members by the Public Printer through the document room. It ought to be treated as official for the purpose of passing a bill under suspension of the rules. The necessity of a thing should give rise to the rule. Necessity is the mother of law as well as the mother of invention.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Necessity does not know any law. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I believe the Speaker recognized me on a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did recognize the gentleman on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. The last remark of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] illustrates his point of view. What are the rules for, except to let us do what we want to do—what he wants to do? [Laughter.] Necessity is the mother of invention. Force is the only power that controls. [Laughter.]

But the gentleman, upon reflection, will see that the House can not proceed upon that basis. Every once in awhile an engrossed copy of a bill, passing from the Senate to the House or passing from the House to the Senate, is lost in some way, and invariably, in every legislative body, it has been held that where an engrossed copy of a bill passed in one branch of the legislative body had become lost, you must obtain from that branch another copy of the engrossed bill before you can proceed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. (H. Rept. 1623.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], under the rules, has the right to call up the conference report and take anybody off the floor. I believe that is the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] calls up the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the statement.

The statement was read.

[For conference report see Senate proceedings of to-day.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Senate has taken a recess until 9.30 this morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the legislative condition to be that there are two bills that have not been agreed to—the Indian appropriation bill, which is in the Senate, and the general deficiency bill, which is out, but the papers are in the possession of the Senate, and the report will have to be made to the Senate before we can act upon it. The Senate has adjourned until 9.30 this morning. Therefore it can not be acted upon until 9.30 this morning. I will therefore move that the House take a recess as soon as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WARBURTON] makes a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Does not a point of order take precedence over this request?

The SPEAKER. The motion to make requests was taken by special order the other day.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has not the floor. He is sitting down. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Only privileged matters are taken up.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged matter.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 9.30 this morning.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.) the House stood in recess until 9.30 o'clock a. m., March 4, 1913.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with the act of January 12, 1895, a list of the documents received and distributed by the Treasury Department during the calendar year 1912 (H. Doc. No. 1448); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Acting Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, submitting, for transmission to Congress, copy of report of the commanding officer of Watertown Arsenal of tests of iron and steel and other materials made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912 (H. Doc. No. 1449); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PATTEN of New York, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6067) for the relief of Edward Byrne, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1609), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, memorials were introduced and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: Memorial of the Legislature of South Dakota, asking that Congress submit an amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America to amend section 1 of article 3, providing that judges of the Federal district courts shall hold their offices for stated terms, to be fixed by Congress, not less than 6 nor more than 12 years; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of South Dakota, memorializing Congress in the matter of desert-land entries; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXI,

Mr. McCALL introduced a bill (H. R. 28870) granting an increase of pension to Isabella B. Slayter, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast, San Francisco, Cal., favoring the passage of the bill making an appropriation for the purpose of experimenting with methods for preventing unnecessary losses to the fruit growers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ANDERSON: Petition of sundry citizens of Caledonia, Minn., favoring the passage of legislation compelling concerns selling goods direct to the consumer by mail to contribute their portion of the funds for the development of the local community, county, and State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BATES: Petition of the Continental Rubber Works, Erie, Pa., and the Hays Manufacturing Co., Erie, Pa., both protesting against the Hamill amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill making an appropriation for the enforcement of the antitrust laws and providing that it shall not be used against individuals or combinations striking for higher wages, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BERGER: Petition of over 6,000 citizens of the United States, favoring the passage of legislation for an investigation of the persecution of the editors of the Appeal to Reason by the Department of Justice; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department.

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast, San Francisco, Cal., favoring the passage of the bill making an appropriation for the purpose of experimenting with methods for avoiding any unnecessary loss to the fruit raisers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. FORNES: Petition of Cleveland Typographical Union, No. 53, Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the passage of legislation making it unlawful to circulate any malicious statement, oral or printed, for cash consideration or for gain, that can not be substantiated; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GOLDFOGLE: Petition of the New York State Conference on Taxation, Binghamton, N. Y., favoring the passage of legislation to extend the work of the Census Department; to the Committee on the Census.

Also, petition of the Employers' Liability Assurance Corporation (Ltd.), of London, England, by Edmund Dewight, resident manager, New York, protesting against the passage of the workmen's compensation bill; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the American Wood Preservers' Association, Baltimore, Md., protesting against the passage of legislation placing a duty on coal-tar creosote; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Joint Commission on Social Service of the Protestant Episcopal Church, New York, favoring the passage of House bill 27281, providing for an eight-hour day for the women of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of D. Auerback & Sons, New York, favoring the passage of legislation for the abolition of the tariff on almonds, walnuts, and filberts; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEVY: Petition of the Associated Chambers of Commerce of the Pacific Coast, of San Francisco, Cal., favoring the passage of the bill making an appropriation for the purpose of experimenting with methods for preventing unnecessary loss to the fruit raisers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of the general executive committee of the Railway Business Association, favoring the passage of legislation for the adoption of the national budget as a method for controlling the receipts and expenditures of the National Government; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MOTT: Petition of the Emanuel Congregational Church, Watertown, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Kenyon "red-light" injunction bill for the cleaning up of Washington for the inauguration; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. J. M. C. SMITH: Petition of the widows of Civil War soldiers of Albion, Mich., favoring the passage of legislation to increase the pension of widows of Civil War soldiers to $20 per month; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Kalamazoo, Mich., favoring the passage of House bill 25685, for the labeling and tagging of all goods and articles intended for sale under interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Cleveland Typographical Union, No. 53, Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the passage of legislation making it unlawful to circulate any malicious statement, printed or oral, for cash consideration or for gain, that can not be substantiated; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 4, 1913.

(Legislative day of Monday, March 3, 1913.)

The Senate reassembled at 9 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., Tuesday, March 4, 1913, on the expiration of the recess.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. SMOOT. As in executive session, I report on three appointments in the Public Health Service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that as in executive session he may report the nominations which will be announced by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Surg. Stephen D. Brooks to be senior surgeon in the Public Health Service.

William E. Gianville to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service.

John H. Smith, jr., to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

DISTRICT EXCISE BOARD (S. DOC. NO. 1141).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of the excise board for the license year ending October 31, 1912, which was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 26874, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. GAMBLE. If the Senator from New Mexico will yield to me for a few moments, I desire, with his courtesy, to take the floor.

Mr. FALL. Certainly; I yield to the Senator with the understanding that I am to continue my remarks.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the presumed subject of objection in the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill now pending before the Senate. Although much time has been consumed in the discussion by the Senator from New Mexico, no specific reference so far has been made to any amendment therein or any objection interposed to a single provision in the bill or item contained therein.

The Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, contained the following provision:

For the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $200,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe.

Mr. President, the foregoing is the law now in force. The measure agreed to in conference and now pending before the Senate contains the following relative to the same subject matter. I assume this to be the subject of difference, although nothing so far in the speech submitted by the Senator from New Mexico alludes to the provision.

For continuing the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands in Oklahoma to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $100,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe, and to be immediately available.

I omit the proviso, because it has no relation to the subject matter now under consideration.

Mr. President, the objections made are indicated by the amendment offered to the Indian appropriation bill as affecting this particular provision when the same was under consideration before the Senate by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON], as follows:

Provided, That no part of the $100,000 hereby appropriated, nor of the $200,000 appropriated by the act approved April 24, 1912, making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, which was authorized to be expended for the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians now confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe, shall be used for the purpose of transporting or making settlement of said Apache Indians, prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., within the State of New Mexico or State of Arizona.

I understand the objections are made on account of the danger, real or apprehended, to the people of New Mexico if any of the Indians now confined at Fort Sill, Okla., are removed by the Federal authorities to the Mescalero Reservation in that State.

I assert, Mr. President, that under the very provisions of the proposed law it specifically provides that no part of the appropriation of $100,000 can be used for the removal of the Apache Indians to the State of New Mexico, and it absolutely prohibits its use for that purpose. It is appropriated specifically for the purpose of purchasing lands for the Apache Indians in the State of Oklahoma. Under such conditions it would necessarily be presumed they would remain there.

After the Indian appropriation bill was passed a year ago the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, acting under the authority of the act, investigated the condition of the Indians and sought to meet their wishes as far as might be as to their future location.

From the record it appears there are confined at Fort Sill 264 Apache Indians. Col. Scott, representing the War Department; Mr. Ellis, representing the Interior Department; and Mr. Phillips, secretary of the Board of Indian Commissioners, made a report on December 12, 1912, to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, stating they had interviewed separately all the Indians thus confined with the purpose in view of permitting them to settle in such locality as the Indians might select consistent with their own welfare and the interest of the Government. After the fullest and freest opportunity had been given them, 176 elected to locate on the Mescalero Reservation, in New Mexico. It was claimed their friends and relatives resided on this particular reservation and they were entirely willing they should return and live with them upon that reservation. Eighty-eight of the number elected to remain in the State of Oklahoma.

The sum appropriated last year was to be expended in the purchase of lands for homes, and in the removal of those thus electing to do so, and also in equipping them and providing the means of self-support.

It is my understanding, Mr. President, that practically all of the $200,000 has been used or hypothecated in carrying out the provisions of the act of a year ago.

An application was made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior for an additional appropriation of $100,000 to carry out the provisions contained in the Indian appropriation act of August 24, 1912, as the amount heretofore provided had proved insufficient.

The appropriation now carried is for the specific purpose, as stated in the bill itself, to buy lands in the State of Oklahoma, and not one dollar of the appropriation can be used in transporting any of the Indians to New Mexico.

Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the presentation made to the Senate by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but so far in his somewhat discursive argument no reference has been made to the provisions of the act covering the provision against which the complaint seems to be made.

The Committees on Indian Affairs of both House and Senate spent a vast amount of time and labor in the preparation of this bill. We hoped it might be, and we believe it is, largely satisfactory to the individual Members of the Senate and the House. After great labor and time an agreement in conference was reached upon all the disputed amendments contained in the bill, aggregating 131.

We sought in the preparation of this particular provision of the bill to meet the conditions and satisfy both of the Senators from New Mexico. We placed a limitation in the bill so that none of the money thus appropriated could be used in transporting any of these particular Indians from Oklahoma to the State of New Mexico. In specific terms it absolutely prohibits it, and directs the manner in which the money shall be invested.

Mr. President, I feel it my duty to make this brief statement to the Senate so that Senators may understand, at least from the RECORD, the matter in controversy.

The conference committee could go no further than they did in the amendment of the paragraph. We sought to the fullest extent to meet the objections of the Senators from New Mexico.

It has been insisted that a provision should have been incorporated absolutely prohibiting the removal of these Indians to New Mexico. That matter had been passed upon by the Senate itself in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico, and the Senate had deliberately rejected it. It was not within the power of the conference committee to embody it under the existing provisions originally in the paragraph.

Mr. President, in addition to that substantially the very amendment proposed in this provision was offered upon the floor of the Senate, through unanimous consent, as a joint resolution by the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] embodying all the provisions of the proposed amendment. I assumed this would be satisfactory to the Senators, and I supposed it was offered to meet the wishes and at the suggestion of the Senators from New Mexico. But the Senator who had occupied the floor in opposition to the conference report and who has delayed its consideration interposed an objection to its consideration, for what purpose or for what object I do not pretend to state.

Mr. President, this measure was carefully and thoroughly considered by the committees of the two Houses. It has had the consideration of both House and Senate. We feel the Senate should have an opportunity at this time to pass its deliberate judgment upon it. For the reason there is a provision in the measure that does not happen to suit or to satisfy one or two Senators, should the Senate as a whole, under the procedure invoked here, be precluded from disposing of the measure and permit the bill to fail?

As far as I am concerned, Mr. President, I have sought to keep the conference report before the Senate for its proper and full consideration, in compliance with the rules and procedure of this body. As far as I am concerned, if the representatives from the State of New Mexico desire to pursue the course they have it is for them and not for me, under the rules of the Senate, to determine.

The estimates for the present fiscal year by the department were $11,303,316.53. The pending measure as agreed to in conference carries a total appropriation of $10,079,205.05. In addition to the appropriations there is much legislation and many provisions of great importance to the Government and in the administration of this important branch of the Federal service and to the well-being and betterment of the Indians.

I exceedingly regret the measure could not so far receive the consideration its importance deserves on account of the procedure under the rules of the Senate which the Senators of New Mexico have invoked. If there be just criticism of the bill, if its provisions are improper and unjust or harmful, let the defects be pointed out to the Senate and have them corrected; but the bill should not be defeated by a filibuster or by the unwarranted consumption of time at this late hour of the session with a discourse under a wide range without even a single suggestion, Mr. President, as to any objections to this particular measure against which the attack has been presumably directed. I have no knowledge concerning it as to whether it had relation to some other provision of the bill undisclosed.

Mr. President, I will not take the time of the Senate to go into any further statement. I simply desired to put into the RECORD my own position, and I feel I owed a duty, not only to myself, but to the committee. Mr. President, it is represented, I understand, there is a strong protest from that immediate locality against these Indians being located at Mescalero. A communication addressed to the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, dated January 22, 1913, has been submitted to me, and I ask that the same be read by the Secretary and be printed in the RECORD. The parties signing this letter do not share such apprehensions.

Mr. President, I insist on the consideration of the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the paper sent by him to the desk be read. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

TULAROSA, N. MEX., January 22, 1913.

To the Secretary of Interior and Secretary of War:

With reference to the moving of the Fort Sill Apaches from Fort Sill, Okla., to the Mescalero Indian Reservation: We, the undersigned citizens of Tularosa and vicinity, in the county of Otero, State of New Mexico, the largest settlement adjoining the reservation, desire to forward the information that we have no objection—furthermore, we believe it will be a benefit to the surrounding country—to the removal of the Fort Sill Apaches to the Mescalero Indian Reservation.

We concede it is a matter in which your honest judgment will be exercised and your actions will be governed by what you deem fit and proper.

This is a Government reservation, under Federal control, and if, in your wisdom, you think the Fort Sill Apaches should be removed here, we, as residents of the immediate vicinity affected, feel that we will not be injured, and do agree in their removal.

Tularosa is the railroad point for the reservation.

Gonzales, Palace Barber Shop, Eusebio Brusuela, Eulogio Saens, Augustin Duran, Panfilo Romero, James Reagan, Manuel Brusuelas, Joseph Wohlgamuth.

Mr. GAMBLE. I desire to thank the Senator from New Mexico for the courtesy he has extended me in yielding to me.

Mr. FALL. The Senator is under no obligation, Mr. President, to thank me. I am rather under obligation to him that he has sought at this stage of the hearing upon this case to present his side of it. I say his side of it, because I think it is purely his side or that of some few of the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs which has been presented.

I should like to have the attention of the Senator, if he will give it to me. I had intended, Mr. President, pursuing the course which I had marked out with reference to the order in which I would present my argument against this bill, but as the Senator has sought to convey the idea apparently that this is a mere filibuster and nothing more, I should like to ask the Senator, for instance, if he knows what amendment 77 injected into this bill by his committee means?

Mr. GAMBLE. I think it is self-explanatory. It is extending the time of payment.

Mr. FALL. Of what?

Mr. GAMBLE. As I recall it, extending for one year the time of payment on lots in the town of Lawton.

Mr. FALL. The north addition to the town of Lawton. Is the Senator aware that a provision in a former bill in practically the identical language has been investigated?

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the amendment was proposed upon the floor of the Senate, as I recall it, by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], with the statement that it had been favorably reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, that it had passed the Senate, as I recall it, and that it had the favorable report of the Secretary of the Interior. If I am not mistaken the measure was drawn and submitted by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FALL. The Senator has no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. GAMBLE. I have no personal knowledge of it.

Mr. FALL. I supposed so. Mr. President, the Senator has attempted to show that the objection, so far as the Senators from New Mexico are concerned, to this measure—at least as to the removal of the Apaches from Fort Sill to Mescalero—is not well founded. The Senator has seen fit to refer to a resolution which was proposed to be offered in an executive session of this body by one of the members of the committee. The Senator has not stated, however, that which I think he will remember—that the Senator from New Mexico who made the objection at the time to the consideration, afterwards, on several different occasions, agreed that if the consideration of this bill should be deferred until last night, so that the resolution might have passed night before last, might have gone to the House, and might have had some opportunity for consideration, the Senator from New Mexico would not unduly delay the passage of this bill, and he was informed by the chairman of the committee that he would not consent to any delay in the consideration of the bill itself.

Now, Mr. President, I am not an old Member of the Senate in point of service, neither am I purely a tyro in legislative matters. Without long experience and not possessing or claiming to possess the wisdom animating the committee, and particularly its chairman, in this case, I yet have seen matters of this kind come up in a legislative hall before.

I asked only an assurance that it was proposed to seek to have even proper consideration of the resolution offered, and if that were done to withdraw the objection to the bill, and I could get none.

The Senator has stated that the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. CATRON] to this bill was passed upon by the Senate. The Senator, of course, means that after the Senator himself had withdrawn the point of order which he had made, after the Senator from Colorado who had renewed the point of order had in turn withdrawn it, the Senator from Oklahoma made a point of order which without discussion ejected from the bill the proposed amendment of my colleague.

Mr. President, it is said that the chairman of the committee and the committee of conference itself, hoping to please the Senators from New Mexico, agreed upon a limitation of the use of the appropriation of $100,000 provided in this bill for the removal of these Indians from Fort Sill.

An amendment was concurred in by the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, and is brought in here, by which it is sought to limit the $100,000 of a continuing appropriation, and the committee of conference refused to limit the use of the other $200,000 of exactly the same appropriation of which the $100,000 as expressed in the bill itself is a limitation.

Mr. President, I want to say now, once for all, in perfect good humor, that neither of the Senators from New Mexico was consulted as to this matter; that they have never been consulted by the committee as to the matter of the original appropriation; that the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and the House Committee on Indian Affairs have been guiding New Mexico so long in her leading strings as a Territory that they can not yet realize that New Mexico is a full-fledged State in the Union. Possibly we need the able representation possessed by other States, but New Mexico is represented here by Senators of its own choice and in the lower House by Representatives of the people's choice. It is apparently impossible for some Senators—particularly the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs—to realize that New Mexico is no longer a dumping ground for political hacks to be appointed by some administration, and that it is no longer a dumping ground for such legislation as the committee, in its wisdom, consulting with no one, shall seek to thrust on New Mexico.

I want to say, sir, that this fight here made has been made, and is being made as it is, for the purpose of convincing the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs that when a matter purely affecting my State is concerned I shall have something to say about what legislation is enacted for that State affecting no other State in the Union.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator says that this conference committee could not adopt certain measures—that it could not legislate. I want to call the attention of the Senator and of the other Members of the Senate to legislation enacted by them. A little item to which I have already directed the Senator's attention is a matter of legislation brought in without objection from him, but, so far as any legislative record is concerned in connection with this proposed removal, it began, in so far as this body is concerned, with a return of a conference report on August 13, 1912.

Mr. President, with reference to the removal of the Apache Indians from Fort Sill to New Mexico or any other place, the Congress of the United States, prior to the bringing in of this conference report, had not enacted one word of legislation. Neither the Senate nor the House had passed upon any such proposition, and, without authority from either House, the conference committee of the two Houses on the 13th day of August last year brought in this report, among other things:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to remove to and establish on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation, in New Mexico, all persons now held as Apache prisoners of war on the Fort Sill Military Reservation, in Oklahoma, who may desire to go to said Mescalero Apache Reservation.

* * * * * * * *

That the Indians of the band electing to stay in Oklahoma may remain on the Fort Sill Military Reservation.

* * * * * * * *

That for the purpose of removing and establishing said Indians on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation there be, and hereby is, appropriated the sum of $100,000.

In the open Senate, Mr. President, in answer to objections raised by other Senators, the acting chairman of the committee at that time acknowledged that this action of the conference committee was absolutely indefensible, and acknowledged on the floor of the Senate that, although the proposition was to affect a State represented by Senators here upon this floor, he had not consulted either of them; that they had not been consulted with reference to the matter.

Mr. President, after the matter was argued here in the Senate in a running colloquy between Senator Heyburn and myself, and after the objections of the Senators from New Mexico to the proposed removal of these Indians to New Mexico had been set forth here, not very fully but had simply been intimated and the reasons given, the Senate of the United States rejected the conference report and sent it back to its conferees because of this provision.

Sir, I say there was an agreement before that bill could be passed or before it was allowed to pass the Senate. I mentioned this matter a day or two ago, and the then acting chairman of this committee, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], rose in his seat and said that my recollection of the agreement was in exact accord with his, that we finally consented to appropriate $200,000 for removing these Indians and placing them upon lands to be selected by the Secretary, with the understanding that they should not go to New Mexico.

As I pointed out first, the Mescalero reserve is not an allotted reserve. There is not one foot of land which can be legally obtained, by purchase or otherwise, for these Apache Indians, and the Secretary of the Interior knows it. The lands have never been allotted in severalty to the Mescaleros themselves. Then read the wording of the appropriation and show me how it is possible, legally, for any portion of this $200,000 to be expended in acquiring lands upon which to settle these Apaches on the Mescalero reserve.

The chairman of the committee evidently knows but little of the contents of this bill, and nothing of the proposition which is under consideration.

The Senator has referred to the fact that these were "good Indians." I want the Senator to be present while I am referring to this matter, because he has made a statement with reference to the character of these Indians. I want to place in parallel columns in the RECORD here the opinion of the Secretary of War as to these Indians on the one hand, and the statement of the Secretary of the Interior as to the character of the Indians on the other.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not recall that I have made any statement with regard to the character of these Indians. All that I said was that the committee had investigated to determine the free choice of the respective Indians as to where they would go, and I submitted a communication that was forwarded to me by the Secretary of the Interior purporting to come from local people in the neighborhood. I have no personal knowledge concerning the character of these Indians, and I did not pretend to make any such statement.

Mr. FALL. I beg the pardon of the Senator if I have misquoted him; but I have a fairly good memory, and I think the RECORD will bear me out that he said an objection was made—he had reference, evidently, to the objection made at the last session of Congress, because it has not been voiced in words at this session—to the removal of these Indians because they were warlike people, and would possibly murder people in New Mexico as they did before they were brought out of there. He said that there was no danger; that they were civilized; that they were not the same character of Indians, according to his information, as they were when their hands were red with the blood of my fellow citizens, innocent women and children in New Mexico. They have not had an opportunity to show what was in their hearts, Mr. President, because they have been prisoners of war since 1886, in charge of the armed forces of the United States.

Just a few words further along that line, and I will conclude on this subject. In answer to the statements of the Senator from South Dakota, I want to place in the RECORD in parallel columns, if possible, the statements of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Interior, respectively, upon this subject, along with the statement of the Senator from South Dakota. Then I will submit to my fellow Senators that these statements prove conclusively that neither the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Interior, nor the respected chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee of this body knows anything about the subject with which he is attempting to deal.

SUSPENSION OF TRAFFIC ON PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FALL. For what purpose?

Mr. JONES. To enable me to offer a Senate resolution, and have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. FALL. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington offers a resolution, which will be stated.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 499), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, by subcommittee or otherwise, be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the conduct of the District police and police department of the District of Columbia in connection with the woman's suffrage parade on March 3, 1913, and ascertain whether said police or police department was negligent in protecting the participants in said parade from interference, insult, and indignity, and submit its report and recommendations as soon as possible; and said committee shall have authority to summon witnesses, administer oaths, take testimony, employ stenographers, and incur such expense as may be necessary to make such investigation, such expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers therefor signed by and approved by the chairman of said District of Columbia Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, a resolution was introduced yesterday by the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] upon the same subject. To what committee was that referred?

Mr. NELSON. It should have been referred to the same committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Minnesota that that was simply a resolution directing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to call upon the chief of police for a report.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That resolution was agreed to. This seems to be a broader resolution.

Mr. NELSON. This is a resolution of investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that the papers this morning are filled with accounts of what occurred during the parade yesterday, which, if true, are a disgrace to our boasted civilization and chivalry. I will state, further, that in conversation with a very prominent gentleman who took part in the parade, he told me of actions during this parade which were a shame to the Capital of the Nation, and that these happened in the very presence of the police without interference or protest on their part. A thorough investigation should be made, so that justice may be done by exoneration or proper condemnation and punishment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I will say that from information I have received from several quarters I have no doubt this investigation ought to be had. It was a most disreputable affair, discreditable to the police force of this city.

Mr. JONES. If it is possible for the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report this resolution to-day, I hope it will be done, so that it can be passed.

Mr. BRISTOW subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it with an amendment to strike out "employ stenographers and incur such expense as may be necessary to make such investigation, such expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers therefor signed by and approved by the chairman of said District of Columbia Committee."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that this resolution makes no charge upon the contingent fund.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

REGULATION OF THE WATERS OF NIAGARA FALLS.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I recognize that in the present condition of business the resolution (H. J. Res. 402) relating to Niagara Falls can not pass. I desire to say, briefly, however, that no inference should be derived from that fact to the effect that the Congress has abandoned Federal control of the Niagara River.

The House unanimously passed this resolution; and but for conditions which are well understood, I am sure the resolution would have passed in the Senate by a very large majority. A bill or resolution will be introduced in the Senate on the very first day of the next session asserting Federal control.

I exceedingly regret the situation, because the passage of this act in 1906 saved the Falls and the rapids below the Falls from the spoliation which was in progress. I am sure there will be the most careful scrutiny of the course of the government of the State of New York and of the incoming administration as regards their action for the preservation of the Falls. I am sure it is right to say that the people of this country earnestly desire that the Falls be saved, in order that this great wonder, this spectacle which has been admired by so many millions of people, may be preserved for future generations.

Not only will there be scrutiny with reference to the course of the administration of the State of New York, but there will be equal attention to the course of the incoming administration. To-day the party which has been out of power for a long time takes the reins. In that inevitable reaction which is sure to arise against those who have the responsibilities of government, and especially in the fierce light of the criticism which is in vogue to-day, the people will demand that the incoming administration take action for the preservation of the Falls. If they are neglected, I verily believe condemnation will be visited upon those who fail to carry out the provisions of this act or to pursue a policy similar to that enunciated in it.

I again state that, in view of the opposition which has developed here to the passage of the resolution, it is very clear that it can not pass, and I regard it as futile to make further effort for its consideration.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28858) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 18, 22, 24, 33, 35, 36, 37, and 53.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, 12, 19, 20, 21, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 32, 34, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 44, 45, 48, 49, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, and 68, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$2,000," and in lines 6 and 7 of said amendment strike out the words "one year's" and insert in lieu thereof "six months"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$100,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,750"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 30, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert ", to continue available during the fiscal year 1914"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "available," insert the following: "until the close of the fiscal year 1914"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 43, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of said amendment, after the word "demise," insert the following: ", $6,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For 16 pages from April 1 to June 30, 1913, both dates inclusive, $3,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After line 22, on page 46, of the bill insert the following: "After March 4, 1913, those members of the Committee on the Judiciary who are Members elect of the House to the Sixty-third Congress, or a majority of them, until the meeting of the first session of the Sixty-third Congress, and the Committee on the Judiciary during the first session of that Congress are authorized to expend for experts, accountants, and clerical and other assistants for the purposes stated in House resolution No. 486 out of the contingent fund of the House a sum not in excess of the balance unexpended under said resolution"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 67, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "For the net amount of a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, dated February 13, 1911, to remain in the Treasury to the credit of the Ute Indians, the amount of said judgment shall bear interest at 4 per cent per annum from and after February 13, 1911, such interest to be available under annual appropriations by Congress for cash per capita payments to the Ute Indians entitled, or for expenditure for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,305,257.19"; and the Senate agree to the same.

F. E. WARREN,
ROBERT J. GAMBLE,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
C. L. BARTLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I tried to watch the reading of the report, but I want to ask the chairman a question about it. I could not catch, from the reading of the report, what action had been taken upon amendments numbered 31 and 32, one in relation to the survey proposition and the other to the homestead matter.

Mr. WARREN. The homestead matter is agreed to and in the bill. What is the other one?

Mr. JONES. The other one is as to the money available for land surveys in the local surveyor generals' offices.

Mr. WARREN. That is included in the bill.

Mr. JONES. I thank the Senator for the information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 234.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from New Mexico has the floor.

Mr. FALL. I yielded to the Senator from Wyoming simply for the consideration of a conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And he has agreed to yield to me in a few minutes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I addressed the Chair and got recognition. I ask the Senator to yield to me.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I will yield to the Senator for the presentation of a conference report or for a matter of that kind, but in justice to the chairman of the committee and to myself I do not think I should yield for a motion to displace the bill under consideration. If that is the purpose of the Senator, I am sure he will realize that I can not yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I fully understand that the Senator would feel very much disappointed to have the Indian bill disposed of in any way.

Mr. FALL. I will dispose of the Indian bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply ask the Senator if he will not yield that I may call up a pension bill.

Mr. BURTON. What pension bill is it?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is what is known as the Crago bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, the subject under consideration and discussion is the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill; and, as far as I am concerned, I can not consent.

Mr. FALL. If I were to undertake to yield to the Senator now, it would undoubtedly meet with objection. I should be glad to have the Senator withhold his request for a little while, at any rate. I am making an attempt to make a record at this point.

Mr. McCUMBER. For an hour and thirty-five minutes?

Mr. FALL. I expect to occupy the floor, unless it is agreed to lay aside this bill, until the new Vice President of the United States is sworn in.

MARIA M'MURDIE.

Mr. CULLOM. I will ask the honorable Senator if he will yield to me, in order to enable me to have the Chair lay a little bill before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FALL. Yes; I understand the bill to which the Senator refers will take only a very short time.

The bill (H. R. 1567) for the relief of Maria McMurdie was read the first time by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent the bill was read the second time at length and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Whereas on August 2, 1887, John McMurdie, an employee of the customhouse at Chicago, Ill., while in the discharge of his duties, was instantly killed by the sudden moving of an elevator cable while the deceased was in the act of stepping over same: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $720 to Maria McMurdie, widow, and the heirs at law of the said John McMurdie.

Mr. BURTON. What is the amount carried by this bill?

Mr. CULLOM. Seven hundred and twenty dollars; that is all.

Mr. BURTON. A year's salary?

Mr. CULLOM. A year's salary.

Mr. BURTON. All right.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the conference report on the bill (H. R. 26874) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not know exactly how the record of this discussion will appear. Therefore, I must refer back for a moment to the statement made by the chairman of this committee, which so plainly shows his entire lack of knowledge of the subject under immediate discussion—who these Indians are, where they came from, what their present condition is, whether they are civilized, semicivilized, or degenerates—in order to show that the two departments of the Government having to do with these particular Indians possess the same character or quantity of knowledge or less knowledge upon the subject than that displayed by the committee; and I say that with all due deference to the committee. I want to place, as I have said, in parallel columns statements from the Secretaries of the War Department and of the Interior Department, respectively, concerning these Indians alongside the statement of the chairman of the committee upon the same subject.

Mr. President, the Secretary of War of the United States has had, or his department has had, charge of the Fort Sill Apaches since 1886. The Secretary of the Interior apparently, however, prior to the passage of any resolution by the Congress of the United States providing for the removal of these Indians, of his own accord, or animated possibly by the desires of someone else, had been investigating the subject of the Fort Sill Apaches while they were yet in the hands of the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War is supposed to know more about these Indians than the head of any other executive department. Under date of December 28, 1912, referring to these Indians at Fort Sill, the Secretary of War over his signature, not acting by any assistant, in answer to a protest submitted by both Senators from New Mexico upon this subject—and I call the attention of Senators to this communication—says:

> Referring to your letter of December 20 on the subject of the removal of the Apache prisoners of war at Fort Sill, Okla., I have the honor to say that these Indians have been a heavy charge on the War Department since 1886, and they could legally be cared for solely under the status of prisoners of war.

I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this:

> Only a very few of those who were on the warpath in 1886—26 years ago—are now alive, and they are superannuated. The others are women and children or sons of the above, who, having been educated and grown up in civilization, are more like white men than Indians.

I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the judgment of the Secretary of War as to what a white man is in comparison with that of the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior on the same subject:

> Most of them are members of Christian churches, and no kind of fear need be entertained of their ever again going to war.

An expert on war testifying for them—

> They are industrially far ahead of the Mescalero Apaches, their relatives—

That is thrown in for good measure, I presume, as the chairman of the committee threw it in—> and are skilled in many kinds of labor. They have clamored for years to be relieved from their status as prisoners and set free. They consider the word "prisoner" a term of reproach, and they are supported in their wish by a large portion of the American people.

Yet they protested to Gen. Miles when Capt. Lawton arrested them, while their hands, as I said awhile ago, were still red with the blood of their victims; they protested then against the word "prisoners"; they thought that they should be simply returned to the San Carlos Reservation, in the State of Arizona.

Mr. President, here is a very frank statement of the present condition of these Indians. On the date of May 12 last—and I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact—the Secretary of the Interior addressed a communication to him as the chairman of the committee. I ask the Senator where he gets his knowledge of the Fort Sill Apaches? Among other things, the Secretary of the Interior, speaking of the same Indians referred to by the Secretary of War, said:

> The Indians when removed to Oklahoma comprised 308 in number, and at the present time number about 250. When they were settled at Fort Sill houses were built for them and tracts of land set apart for use of the different families, and they were furnished with cattle, horses, etc. It is now reported that these family tracts are not cultivated, but have been allowed to grow up with sunflowers, and that the only land in cultivation is a tract used in common and cultivated by white renters or laborers. All the reports indicate that these Indians, instead of advancing, have retrograded mentally, morally, and physically.

Yet these are the Indians who are so well civilized and such Christian gentlemen that they deserve, in the eyes and in the opinion of the honorable Secretary of War, to rank with the white man or above him. He says they are a very much higher grade Indian than is the Mescalero. I presume he desires to send them as missionaries to the Mescaleros to assist in their civilization; and yet the Secretary of the Interior, to whose charge these Indians are proposed to be delivered, says that they have deteriorated mentally, morally, and physically; that they will not work; that they are lazy; that they are retrograding; and that they have allowed to run to waste the tillable lands which have been given them.

Mr. President, I submit that the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, the honorable Secretary of War, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, with all due deference to the respective members of the committee and to the gentlemen named, have shown in this bill and in the reports to which I have referred that they are absolutely at sea, to say the least, upon the subject upon which they are desiring the Senate to legislate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 21849. An act for the relief of Felix Morgan;

H. R. 28098. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at Orange, Tex.; and

H. R. 28840. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. John River, between the town of Van Buren, Me., and the parish of St. Leonards, Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 8540. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 1567. An act for the relief of Maria McMurdee;

H. R. 26680. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes;

H. R. 28858. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 28840. An act authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the St. John River, between the town of Van Buren, Me., and the parish of St. Leonards, Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada.

BRIDGE ACROSS SABINE RIVER AT ORANGE, TEX.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read by its title, and calls the attention of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The bill (H. R. 28098) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at Orange, Tex., was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Orange Commercial Club, its successors and assigns, be, and they hereby are, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Sabine River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at the city of Orange, Tex., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.
> SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FELIX MORGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 21849) for the relief of Felix Morgan, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. WATSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was read the second time at length and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Felix Morgan, of Wirt County, W. Va., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government on the Little Kanawha River, in Wirt County, W. Va.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval, the bill (H. R. 28775), being "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes."

My reasons for failing to approve this important appropriation bill are found in a provision which has been added to that appropriating $300,000 for the enforcement of the antitrust laws in the following language:

Provided, however, That no part of this money shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor, or for any act done in furtherance thereof not in itself unlawful: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to and for the purpose to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products.

This provision is class legislation of the most vicious sort. If it were enacted as substantive law and not merely as a qualification upon the use of monies appropriated for the enforcement of the law, no one, I take it, would doubt its unconstitutionality. A similar provision in the laws of the State of Illinois was declared by the Supreme Court to be an invasion of the guaranty of the equal protection of the laws contained in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States in the case of Connelly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co. (184 U. S., 540), although the only exception in that instance from the illegality of organizations and combinations, etc., declared by that statute, was one which exempted agriculturists and live-stock raisers in respect of their products or live stock in hand from the operation of the law leaving them free to combine to do that which, if done by others, would be a crime against the State.

The proviso is subtly worded, so as, in a measure, to conceal its full effect, by providing that no part of the money appropriated shall be spent in the prosecution of any organization or individual "for entering into any combination or agreement having in view the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor," and so forth. So that any organization formed with the beneficent purpose described in the proviso might later engage in a conspiracy to destroy by force, violence, or unfair means any employer or employee who failed to conform to its requirements; and yet, because of its originally avowed lawful purpose, it would be exempt from prosecution, so far as prosecution depended upon the moneys appropriated by this act, no matter how wicked, how cruel, how deliberate the acts of which it was guilty. So, too, by the following sentence in the act such an organization would be protected from prosecution "for any act done in furtherance" of "the increasing of wages, shortening of hours, or bettering the condition of labor" not in itself unlawful. But under the law of criminal conspiracy acts lawful in themselves may become the weapons whereby an unlawful purpose is carried out and accomplished. (Shawnee Compressed Coal Co. v. Anderson, 209 U. S., 423–434; Aikens v. Wisconsin, 195 U. S., 194–206; Swift v. United States, 196 U. S., 375–396; United States v. Reading Co., Dec. 16, 1912.)

The further proviso, that the appropriation shall not be used in the prosecution of producers of farm products and associations of farmers who cooperate and organize in an effort to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products, is apparently designed to encourage, or at least to discourage the prosecution of, organizations having for their purpose the artificial enhancement of the prices of food products, and thus to avoid the effect of the construction given to the antitrust law in the case of United States against Patten, decided January 6, 1913.

At a time when there is widespread complaint of the high cost of living it certainly would be anomalous to put on the statute books of the United States an act, in effect, preventing the prosecution of combinations of producers of farm products for the purpose of artificially controlling prices; and the evil is not removed, although it may be masked, by referring to the purpose of the organization as "to obtain and maintain a fair and reasonable price for their products."

An amendment almost in the language of this proviso, so far as it refers to organizations for the increasing of wages, etc., was introduced in the Sixty-first Congress, passed the House, was rejected in the Senate, and after a very full discussion in the House, failed of enactment. Representative Madison, speaking in favor of the amendment which struck out the proviso, characterized it as an attempt to "write into the law, so far as this particular measure is concerned, a legalization of the secondary boycott. * * * The laws of this country," he pointed out, "are liberal to the workingman. He can strike, he can agree to strike, he can act under a leader in a strike, and he can apply the direct boycott, but when it comes to going further and so acting as to impede and obstruct the natural and lawful course of trade in this country, then the law says he shall stop. And all in the world that this antitrust act does is to apply to him that simple and proper rule, that he, too, as well as the creators of trusts and monopolies, shall not obstruct the natural and ordinary course of trade in the United States of America." "I believe," he added, "in the high aims, motives, and patriotism of the American workingman and do not believe that, rightly understanding this amendment, they would ask us to write it into the law of this Republic." (CONG. RECORD, p. 8850, 61st Cong., 2d sess.)

It is because I am unwilling to be a party to writing such a provision into the laws of this Republic that I am unable to give my assent to a bill which contains this provision.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 4, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objection of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding? The Constitution requires that the vote shall be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I notice that this bill, among other items, contains an appropriation of $500,000, according to the Senate amendment. I desire to speak on the question before the Senate. The item to which I refer is for—

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the investigation of the official acts, records, and accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks, and referees of the United States courts and the Territorial courts, and United States commissioners, for which purpose all the official papers, records, and dockets of said officers, without exception, shall be examined by the agents of the Attorney General at any time; for the protection of the person of the President of the United States; for such other investigations regarding official matters under the control of the Department of Justice as may be directed by the Attorney General, including not to exceed $10,000 for necessary employees at the seat of government, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $500,000.

Mr. President, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was agreed to a few days ago, contained an item of $915,000 for the pay of the District police, a force organized and maintained at an enormous annual expense for the detection and prosecution of crime. On yesterday afternoon the women of the District of Columbia and of other parts of the United States, under the protection, or supposed protection, of a resolution of Congress, conducted a great pageant and parade in this city. This resolution covered their line of march and directed the police officers to protect their parade on Pennsylvania Avenue and other streets. Instead of receiving the benefit of this appropriation, provided in part by the people of the States from which they and their sympathizers came, these women met with an apparent covert acquiescence of the police in violent attacks made upon them and in an effort to run over and break up the parade.

I only make these remarks, Mr. President, for the purpose of saying that hereafter when these appropriations of millions of dollars are asked for the purpose of preserving the peace and enforcing the law, upon which the very existence of the country depends, there will be some scrutiny and inquiry made as to the personnel and as to the salary of the men for whose services the appropriations are made. I speak from personal observation of what occurred. I have no doubt that it will be claimed by the chief of police, or the major of police, whatever his official title may be, that he did not have sufficient men.

I noticed, however, at the point at which the principal difficulties occurred, where the crowds of people were allowed to cover the entire street and obstruct absolutely the parade, a sufficient number of policemen to have preserved order. The police could have prevented the crowd from obstructing the parade, and yet there was no apparent effort made at that point to carry out the purpose of the resolution of Congress. They might as well have been a lot of wooden painted policemen so far as performing the functions of a police force is concerned. I do not know what the attitude or motives of individual policemen may be, but ordinarily the conduct and attitude of the men of a police force reflect the motives of the head of the force.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I make a point of order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida makes a point of order. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is out of order to enter upon a discussion of this matter at this time. I will also say that a resolution covering the subject which the Senator is discussing has already passed the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the privilege of any message expires when the message is laid before the body. There is no restriction upon the action of the Senate regarding this message or any other message. It can be debated; it can be postponed; it can be laid aside. Any action may be taken with regard to it. The other day we debated the veto message of the President on the immigration bill for three hours. It does not seem to me that when the whole bill is open it is possible to say what portion of it a Senator shall discuss. The bill as a whole has failed to obtain the approval of the President. He bases his objection on one clause of the bill; but it seems to me to be perfectly clear that there is no limitation whatever in dealing with the subject of the message and that it is open to any Senator to discuss any portion of the vetoed bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In dealing with the point of order——

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what item the Senator from Washington is speaking to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am speaking upon the item of $500,000 for the detection and prosecution of crimes and for the preservation of law and order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In dealing with the point of order the Chair is of the opinion that it would be a more orderly procedure to discuss the provisions of the bill upon which the veto message was based. At the same time the Chair recognizes the fact that it is within the province of the Senate to discuss this bill or, under our rules, any other bill, and for that reason the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not apprehend, Mr. President, that a vote of the Senate upon this bill, either sustaining or overruling the veto of the President, must necessarily be based upon the identical reasons set forth in the veto message. There may be other provisions in the bill which Senators regard as of equal importance with that upon which the veto is based. If it is desired that the debate should be confined specifically to the proposition which is discussed in the veto message, I will only say, in passing, as to that particular point, that it was never intended by the Congress when the Sherman antitrust law was enacted that it should apply to labor unions or organizations of that nature. It was intended to apply to industrial and commercial organizations engaged in business and trade, but not to organizations of a social and personal character, which were intended for the betterment of the conditions of human beings, and not for profit. Organizations in restraint of trade within the purview of the Sherman antitrust act are those created for making money, however the language of the act may have been construed to include labor unions. It is nevertheless true that Congress never intended that the act should apply to labor unions; and, consequently, I do not regard the provisions of the bill on which the President based his veto as a sufficient reason for voting against it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like for the Senate of the United States to take cognizance of the fact—and I should like to have an expression from the Senator on this—that this veto of the President brings out and accentuates the idea that the producers of the raw material of this country are to be brought under the Sherman antitrust act, and therefore the farmers of the country may not combine to protect themselves.

I have only a word more to say, and then I am through. If the legislation of this country is going to prohibit those who are naturally dependent on enjoying the proceeds of that which they produce from peaceably combining and so establishing prices to be put upon their products, there will be a Senate elected and a House of Representatives elected that will bow to the will of the people, and the Sherman antitrust law will be modified to meet their contention.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I shall conclude very briefly what I have to say in regard to this bill. So far as the passage of it is concerned, I am indifferent whether it passes or does not pass. There are many things in it that ought not to be enacted into law, and some things that ought to be; also, some items have been left out of the bill that ought to have been incorporated in it. An amendment providing appropriations for the improvement of the roads in national parks——

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER (continuing). Which are of benefit to the entire country, and particularly to the State which I, in part, represent, was rejected, while other appropriations of much larger amounts for no good purpose were included in the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a minute?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that if the Senator from Washington favors this bill he would permit a roll call and endeavor to secure its passage. The time has almost gone when it can be passed, and any further delay will prevent its passage. I simply want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if the friends of this measure will stop talking and vote for its passage they may come to some result.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not very anxious that the bill should pass, Mr. President. An extra session of Congress will convene within a month. A million dollar appropriation in this bill, in two lump sums, for "miscellaneous expenses" and for the "detection and prosecution of crime," and a lump sum of $200,000 additional for special counsel, all to be expended in the discretion of the department, should be stricken out, or else Congress should specify the purposes to which it is to be applied. This bill carries an appropriation of over $113,000,000, and it is safe to say that this amount can be reduced many millions and still include a number of meritorious items much needed in the improvement and development of the West, which have been heretofore rejected.

Should the $1,200,000 referred to be retained in the bill, to be expended in the discretion of the Department of Justice, it is to be hoped that the department will use it to better effect and with more good faith than the police force of the city of Washington has exhibited in the enforcement of order and the prevention of violence, which is the principle upon which our municipal, State, and National Governments must rest. In order to emphasize what I was proceeding to say when I was interrupted, I will state that the police force instead of protecting this parade allowed automobiles and ambulances to move through it apparently with the intention and for the purpose of breaking it up. They allowed a crowd of hundreds of thousands of people, composed of those who were jeering and hostile to this parade, which was composed largely of women, to come in immediate contact with them, so that they were in danger of physical violence and even in danger of losing their lives from the mob by which they were surrounded.

I make these remarks in order to call attention to the fact that this police force is acting under the authority of Congress; that it depends upon Congress for its maintenance and support; that notice has been taken of the fact that this force, established for the protection of person and life, did not execute the resolution of Congress, and failed to fulfill the purpose of its existence in the particular instance and important occasion to which I have referred.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28858) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 8540) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 8399) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 28775. An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 28766. An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8399) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was, on page 4, to strike out lines 3 to 5, inclusive, in the following words:

The name of Mary MacArthur, widow of Arthur MacArthur, late lieutenant general United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask that the pending motion be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on House bill 26874, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask how much time we have for discussion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will state his purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to move and to read a motion I made on Saturday and which went over until to-day under objection:

That the conferees on the part of the Senate upon the bill (H. R. 22871) to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto, are hereby discharged.

That the Senate recede from the Senate substitute and agree to the House bill.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am aware that if any serious debate is to be had upon this motion we will hardly have time before 12 o'clock to pass upon it, but it occurs to me that in view of the value of the measure possibly unanimous consent might be given to let it go through. Therefore I ask for a unanimous consent, as I will understand that otherwise my motion would not prevail.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is no doubt we all feel great sympathy in the purpose of this bill, but the precise form that it should take will unquestionably lead to discussion. It also involves a very interesting question of parliamentary procedure, which was somewhat discussed yesterday and on which a very wise ruling was made as to one branch of the subject.

This involves the other branch. I should feel it necessary to trace the history of the question of procedure, which is a very important one. Therefore I will say to the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from South Dakota that this is certain to lead to debate.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts and in view of the fact that each Senator must be the judge of that which is most important to him, while I believe I would be personally in accord with the motion which the Senator from Georgia makes, yet in exercising my senatorial judgment, believing that the argument which I am making is more interesting than would be the parliamentary discussion, I must decline to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me.

Mr. FALL. For what purpose? Will the Senator state?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask unanimous consent for printing a document. It will not lead to any debate.

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a report here of the Department of the Interior on Senate bill 7625, a bill for the relief of certain members of the Five Civilized Tribes of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the report which he sends to the desk shall be printed as a Senate document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the conference report on House bill 26874, the Indian appropriation bill. The Senator from New Mexico will proceed.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have not been able to preserve the continuity of my speech, which has so far been something like the artillery duel between the opposing forces in the City of Mexico, scattering, but I hope there are not so many casualties among the bystanders as occurred there.

I have a document here that I would like unanimous consent to have printed. I think it conveys very valuable information which might be used with much profit by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs at the next session.

In view of the fact that there seems to be a stupendous amount of ignorance concerning the true history of the Fort Sill Apaches, I ask the same unanimous consent which was extended to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to have the document I send to the desk read by the Secretary. If there is objection to the reading of the document, I will then ask that it may be printed as a Senate document for the benefit of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed a committee of three Members of the House to join a similar committee to be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the session, are ready to adjourn.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. JOHN RIVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives and calls the attention of the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON].

The bill (H. R. 28840) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. John River between the town of Van Buren, Me., and the parish of St. Leonards, Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada, was read the first time by its title.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Van Buren Bridge Co., a corporation created by the laws of the State of Maine, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the St. John River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the town of Van Buren, in the county of Aroostook, in the State of Maine, to a point on the opposite side of said river in the parish of St. Leonards, in the county of Madawska, in the Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada; said bridge shall be constructed in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the construction of the said bridge shall not be commenced until the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada for the erection of the structure shall have been obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 500), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has asked to be excused from service upon the committee. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] as the committee on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I send the document to the desk and ask that its title may be read. It is Geronimo's story of his own life.

Mr. GAMBLE. It is utterly impossible to hear the Senator or to hear the request he has submitted. I suggest that he speak louder.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have endeavored to secure the ear of the Senator from South Dakota, the chairman of the committee, since yesterday noon, I think. I am glad to know that he is becoming a convert and is desirous of hearing me.

Mr. GAMBLE. Do I understand the request of the Senator from New Mexico to be that the volume he has sent to the desk be printed as a document?

Mr. FALL. I think, Mr. President, that I am justified, in view of the course which this debate has taken, in asking that it be printed as a public document, so that it may be available to the next Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GAMBLE. I should like to submit a further request——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico asks unanimous consent that a book, entitled "Geronimo's Life," shall be printed as a public document. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. FALL. Then I ask that the Secretary proceed to read the book.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico asks that the book shall be read by the Secretary. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. FALL. I was not so fortunate as the Senator from Utah.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 7415) granting to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. a right of way through the Fort Wingate Military Reservation, in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28093) to amend an act entitled "An act granting a service pension to certain veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 28731) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3843. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease to the operators of coal mines in Oklahoma additional acreage from the unleased coal land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations;

S. 1653. An act to provide American registry for the steam yacht Diana;

S. 7747. An act for the relief of Charles Dudley Daly;

S. 8348. An act waiving the age limit for admission to the Pay Corps of the United States Navy in the case of Minor Meriwether, jr.;

S. 8377. An act to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, in Minneapolis, Hennepin County, Minn.;

S. 8439. An act restricting the issuance of interlocutory injunctions to suspend the enforcement of the statute of a State or of an order made by an administrative board or commission created by and acting under the statute of a State;

S. 8538. An act to authorize the St. Louis & Western Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River near Weldon Springs Landing, in the State of Missouri;

S. 8539. An act to authorize the St. Louis Belt, Illinois & Eastern Traction Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the mouth of the Missouri River;

S. 8536. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in Beltrami County, in the State of Minnesota;

S. 8443. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the town of Weldon Springs Landing, Mo.;

S. 8273. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls;

S. 8429. An act to create a board of local inspectors, Steamboat Inspection Service, for the port of Los Angeles, Cal.;

H. R. 23673. An act to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States, to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion, and to secure the abrogation of treaty provisions in relation thereto, and to promote safety at sea;

H. R. 27148. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes;

H. R. 25780. An act to amend section 3186 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

H. R. 25781. An act to amend section 77 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 28812. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 28093. An act to amend an act entitled "An act granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico," approved May 11, 1912.

ALASKA NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to ask for the present consideration of the bill just brought over from the House to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 28731) to extend the time for the completion of the Alaska Northern Railway, and for other purposes, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which will be read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be read, so that the Senate may be informed of what it contains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has just ordered the reading of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the time for filing the map and maps of definite location of the Alaska Northern Railway, formerly known as the Alaska Central Railway, of its branches, station grounds and terminal grounds, and junction and division terminals provided and required by the act entitled "An act for extending the homestead laws and providing for the right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, both within and without reservations and withdrawals, be, and the same hereby is, extended until three years after the passage of this act, and the time for completing the railway is hereby extended until two years after the filing of said maps; and leave is hereby granted to the Alaska Northern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, to file said map and maps of definite location within the time and the times therefor as above provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to have the effect of renewing or reviving any grant of title to real estate under the act of June 30, 1906, or any subsequent act which may have already lapsed or become forfeited: Provided further, That in case the United States shall at any time desire to acquire, by purchase or condemnation proceedings, said railroad, the extension herein made and the right of way secured thereby shall not be deemed or held to constitute any asset or value owned by said Alaska Northern Railway Co., its assigns or successors, above actual cost of the survey and locations thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, believing that the railroads constitute the key to the control of all the great wealth of that country, and believing, as I do, that the Government should own and operate the railroads of Alaska, I must interpose an objection to the present consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The Senator from New Mexico is entitled to the floor.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask that the conference report on House bill 26874, being the Indian appropriation bill, be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask one question of the Senator from New Mexico before unanimous consent is granted, and that is as to whether he has any other objection to the pending conference report except the clause relating to the removal of the Apache Indians from Oklahoma to New Mexico?

Mr. FALL. I have other objections to the bill and to the report, Mr. President; but I will state frankly that there are appropriations on this bill for my State, as there are appropriations for the States of other Senators, and I presume that, having the same motives that actuate other Senators, were it not that I am governed by a matter of principle in this particular matter, I would allow the appropriations to overrule my better judgment and withdraw opposition to the bill.

Mr. GORE. No one challenges the high principle which actuates the Senator from New Mexico, but I do hope that during his brief remarks he will find occasion to enumerate the other objections, and I will request him to do so now, merely giving an enumeration and not entering on an elaborate discussion.

Mr. FALL. It would not be possible for me to do so, because to enumerate my objections would require me to read the entire bill through nearly to the last word in it, and possibly comment upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota that the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill shall be temporarily laid aside? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the President having returned to the House, in which it originated, the bill (H. R. 28775) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, with his objection thereto, the House proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same; and

Resolved, That the said bill do pass, two-thirds of the House agreeing to pass the same.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

On March 4, 1913:

S. J. Res. 132. Joint resolution providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe;

S. 1653. An act to provide American register for the steam yacht Diana;

S. 3843. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease to the operators of coal mines in Oklahoma additional acreage from the unleased segregated coal land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations;

S. 8540. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

At 11 o'clock and 50 minutes a. m. Mr. WARREN and Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared at the bar of the Senate, and

Mr. WARREN said: Mr. President, the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to join a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and ascertain if he had any further communication to make have performed that duty and now beg to report that the President has no further communication to make to Congress.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENTS PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEWLANDS in the chair). The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Virginia.

The resolution (S. Res. 501) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER and Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which they, as Presidents pro tempore of the Senate, have, respectively, presided over its deliberations during the present session.

GUESTS OF THE SENATE.

At 11 o'clock and 54 minutes a. m. the Sergeant at Arms announced the Speaker and Members of the House of Representatives.

The Speaker was escorted to a seat on the left of the President pro tempore and the Members of the House occupied the seats reserved for them.

The ambassadors of and ministers plenipotentiary from foreign countries were announced and took the seats reserved for them.

The Chief Justice of the United States and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States were announced and were escorted to the seats provided for them.

At 11 o'clock and 58 minutes a. m. THOMAS R. MARSHALL, of Indiana, the Vice President elect of the United States, was announced, accompanied by the joint committee of arrangements, and was seated on the right of the President pro tempore of the Senate.

At 12 o'clock William H. Taft, President of the United States, and Woodrow Wilson, President elect of the United States, were announced, accompanied by the joint committee of arrangements, and were seated in the space in front of the Secretary's desk, the members of the joint committee occupying seats on either side of them.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore administered the oath of office prescribed by law to the Vice President elect.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GALLINGER). Senators, in behalf of the senior Senator from Georgia, Mr. BACON, and for myself I beg to thank you most sincerely for your kind words of commendation to us jointly, as expressed in your resolution. The position of President pro tempore of the Senate is a responsible and honorable one, and if we have discharged the duties of that high office to the satisfaction of our fellow Senators it is the highest reward that we could ask or expect at your hands. We assure you, one and all, of our deep appreciation of your good will, and we also desire to thank you for your cordial cooperation in promoting the legislation of the Congress that is about to come to an end.

And now, Senators, speaking for the Senator from Georgia, as well as for myself, I bid you all an affectionate farewell, hoping and praying that the good Lord may safely direct you to your homes and have you in His keeping always.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore now declares the United States Senate adjourned sine die.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 4, 1913.

(Legislative day of Saturday, March 1, 1913.)

AFTER THE RECESS.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] get his privileged matter considered?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I got that through last night.

FELIX MORGAN.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 21849) for the relief of Felix Morgan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Felix Morgan, of Wirt County, W. Va., out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, to compensate him for injuries received while in the employ of the Government on the Little Kanawha River, in Wirt County, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAY. I demand a second.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia is entitled to 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. HAY. I do not care for any debate.

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, all I desire to say about this bill is that in my judgment it is one of the most meritorious bills that has ever come before this House. This man was blown up in a powder accident while engaged in the service of his Government, and he is as much entitled to this compensation as though he had fallen on the field of battle. Some officers of the War Department have stated that if any case should ever be allowed, this is the one. It comes from the full Committee on Claims, after a long examination, with a unanimous favorable report.

Mr. HAY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of paying compensation, or a gratuity, on account of an injury which occurred to a Government employee, I believe——

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Something over 20 years ago. I do not believe the House ought to set the precedent of paying old personal-injury claims which arose many years ago, before it became the policy of Congress to make any allowance for such claims. My understanding is that this is a House bill. Am I correct?

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the only object that I can see in passing it this morning is to pay a tribute of respect, admiration, and affection to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON], who is not to be with us in the next House, much to our regret. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? I have a claim for a man whose arm was shot off by the soldiers of the United States at Brownsville while in the performance of his official duty as chief of police of the city of Brownsville at the time the United States soldiers' raid was made there. I have never pressed a bill, for the reason that I knew it would set a precedent. I should like to have the gentleman from Illinois tell me his viewpoint with reference to persons injured by United States soldiers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if one should take the list of casualties occurring to persons in the employ of the Government, or caused to persons outside of the Government by those within the employ of the Government, from the foundation of the Government down to date, it would amount to a very large number, and to pay anything in each case would amount to a very large sum.

Until the Sixty-first Congress, the last one preceding this, it was not the policy of the Government to pay compensation for personal injuries at all. That policy was waived in a few cases, such as the one which occurred from the Ford Theater disaster a good many years ago. In the last Congress or the one preceding it a general law was passed providing for making compensation to persons engaged in certain hazardous employments in the Government, the compensation in any case being limited to what was equal to one year's salary. Following that in the last Congress the Committee on Claims undertook to recommend and did recommend the passage of bills designed to make compensation for personal injuries which occurred along about the time that the general law took effect, where they were special cases.

Of course to go back 20 years is equivalent to announcing the policy that you may go back 40 years, and if you go back 40 years we may soon be going back as far as the French spoliation claims that are now pending before Congress, a part of which arose in the eighteenth century more than 115 years ago.

I wish it to be distinctly understood, so far as I am concerned, that allowing this bill to pass this morning as a tribute to our friend from West Virginia [Mr. HAMILTON] is not to be considered a precedent for passing these old claims hereafter. This is a House bill which is not likely to become a law. It will have to take its chances in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH WINGATE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 7415) granting to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. the right of way through the Fort Wingate Military Reservation, in New Mexico, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. of Kansas, a corporation created under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, be, and the same is hereby, granted a revocable license to survey, locate, construct, and maintain a railway, telegraph, and telephone line into and upon Fort Wingate Military Reservation, N. Mex., to connect with its present right of way, as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War or the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such reservation may otherwise fall.

SEC. 2. That said corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 200 feet in width through said Fort Wingate Reservation, with the right to use other additional ground when cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of said roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of the said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill, excepting, however, from said right of way hereby granted that strip or portion thereof which would be included within the limits of the present 200-foot right of way heretofore granted to said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. and used by it as its main line right of way: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines and the use and enjoyment of the rights and privileges herein granted; and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States, from which the same shall be taken: Provided further, That any other person or duly organized corporation constructing a railroad along a line necessitating the crossing of said reservation may, upon obtaining a license from the Secretary of War, use the track and other constructions herein authorized to be placed upon the reservation by the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. upon paying just compensation; and if the parties concerned can not agree upon the amount of such compensation, the sum or sums to be paid for said use shall be fixed by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That before this act shall become operative a description by metes and bounds of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be approved by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That the said Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co. of Kansas, and other parties obtaining license from the Secretary of War as hereinbefore provided, shall comply with such other regulations or conditions as may from time to time be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the powers herein granted are limited to a period of 50 years unless sooner altered, amended, or repealed by Congress.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw his motion to suspend the rules and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. There was no information whatever in the report of this bill to the House. I obtained the report of the Senate on the bill, and apparently from that report it seems that the railway company now has a right of way and the tracks laid through this military reservation, and simply desires to straighten this right of way. Is that correct?

Mr. FIELDS. That is correct. I was not satisfied with the information at hand when I made the report, and I asked the railway company for further information. I find that this company is operating a track across this reservation. On the east end of the reservation there is a very heavy grade. The company is building a double or second track east of the reservation, and in order to get over this grade with the second track it is necessary to intersect their other line on the reservation at a point 1,922 feet from the east line of the reservation, and which reduces the grade on the road from 1 per cent to six-tenths of 1 per cent.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the railroad will acquire practically no more land under this bill than it now is in possession of?

Mr. FIELDS. That is my understanding.

Mr. MANN. I notice the bill provides in reference to the location—

as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War or the chief officer of the department under whose supervision such reservation may otherwise fall.

I apprehend we now know under what department this comes and who has authority. The balance of the bill seems to confer authority upon the Secretary of War. Is there any other department which has any supervision of this military reservation except the War Department?

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman from Illinois is more able to answer that question than I.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kentucky will permit, as I remember the consideration of this bill, the idea was that in case this post should be abandoned it should come under the control of the Department of the Interior rather than the Department of War.

Mr. MANN. If that is the case, it is poorly carried out in the bill.

Mr. TILSON. I think it was the idea to place it under the Department of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. That provision applies only to locating the right of way in the first place, whereas the balance of the provisions of the bill, in reference to ordering a removal of the tracks, is placed directly under the Secretary of War without referring it to any other department.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois, I have here a blue print showing the route across the reservation. The right of way asked for is just a little south of the main line and intersects the main line west of the grade to which I have referred.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the gentleman from Illinois that I have been investigating this Wingate military reservation for the reason that it is desirable to establish a school there for the use of the Navaho Indians. I can state that it has been transferred from the War Department to the Interior Department, and I hope that this reservation will be used as an Industrial Indian School. There are many very valuable buildings there, and it will save a great deal of expense to the Government to have these buildings fitted up for school and hospital purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, since my distinguished friend from Texas has referred to the Navaho School, would it be taking too great a liberty to ask him whether there is apparently any chance for the final enactment at this session of the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope so, because, if it is not enacted, it will leave many of the Indians in a bad condition until we have further legislation in the next Congress.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman and I both hope so; but is there any chance?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that the Senators from New Mexico are holding up the bill on account of the provision relating to the Apache prisoners of war held at Fort Sill, Okla. They fear that these Indians will be returned to New Mexico if the bill becomes a law. Their fears are unfounded, however, in my judgment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FIELDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and resolutions of the following titles:

H. R. 28746. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 28672. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 22913. An act to create a Department of Labor; and

H. R. 28180. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

CAPT. HAROLD L. JACKSON.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up from the calendar the bill S. 6244 and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 6244. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6244) to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army of the United States with the same rank and relative position he would hold if he had not been retired: Provided, That such restoration shall be in temporary excess of the number authorized only until such time as a vacancy shall occur in the grade of major of Infantry: Provided further, That prior to his restoration to the active list this officer shall have passed an examination for promotion to the grade of major of Infantry, as prescribed by regulations of the War Department under the terms of the act of Congress approved October 1, 1890.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there is no man in the House for whom I have greater affection than the gentleman from Connecticut, who, I regret very much indeed, will not be here in the next House. He has on many occasions been of great assistance to me. I feel as though if there were anyone in the House who could run over me it would be the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. I would be far from attempting it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANN. And yet I have given notice that this class of bills could not pass in my presence by unanimous consent or without a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Did not the gentleman say that in regard to two bills which passed before, which were not of equal merit to this bill?

Mr. MANN. I said that after the bills had passed.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very meritorious bill.

Mr. MANN. And therefore I am compelled to object.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman recognized for that purpose?

Mr. TILSON. I ask for recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize the gentleman unless he agrees in advance that if it comes out on the wrong side he will not raise the point of no quorum.

Mr. TILSON. What does the gentleman mean by the wrong side?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman gets it knocked out.

Mr. TILSON. I would be willing to take my chances, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Those in favor of suspending the rules——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I just stated to the gentleman and to the House I would require a quorum to pass the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Alabama suspend a moment to enable the Chair to announce the committee to attend the unveiling and dedication of the monument to Thomas Jefferson at St. Louis?

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. COLLIER, Mr. CULLOP, Mr. COVINGTON, Mr. CRAVENS, Mr. WHITE, Mr. GILL, Mr. RODENBERG, Mr. WOODS of Iowa, Mr. KAHN, Mr. BARTHOLDT, and Mr. DYER.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] merely wants to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD relative to H. R. 27281, a bill relative to the hours of work of women and children.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McClintock, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 28858) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 1567. An act for the relief of Maria McMurdie.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PRINTING OF PRAYERS OF CHAPLAIN, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 876.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the prayers offered by the Chaplain, Henry N. Couden, at each morning's session of the Sixty-second Congress be printed in one volume, at a cost not to exceed $500, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, to be compiled by the said Chaplain and to be placed at the disposal of Members of the Sixty-second Congress, in equal allotments, after reserving 100 copies for the disposal of the Chaplain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. There is no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING PROCEEDINGS OF ARCHBALD IMPEACHMENT TRIAL.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess for 15 minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Alabama to suspend——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina what he desires to bring up?

Mr. FINLEY. It is Senate concurrent resolution No. 36, and relates to printing the proceedings relative to the impeachment of Judge Archbald. It has been passed by the Senate and they are very anxious and solicitous that it should be passed, and so is the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, Judge CLAYTON. It will not take a minute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, but we have passed the point where we can take up contested matters.

Mr. FINLEY. This is uncontested, and there will be no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent for the consideration of his resolution I will not object.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 36, and that the same may be considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 1,500 copies of the proceedings in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives and before the Judiciary Committee thereof, in the matter of the impeachment of Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States of the third judicial circuit, and designated a judge of the Commerce Court, of which 500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 1,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from the further consideration of the bill S. 7723, "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," and pass the bill.

Now, that is the same matter that was up this morning, and the parliamentary situation is that the Senate bill has been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and the chairman of that committee, after a written request submitted yesterday by myself and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], and the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT], refused in writing to send that bill over here to the Speaker's table, so that the engrossed copy might be present when the motion to discharge the committee and pass the bill could be presented. Under the rules or precedents the House can not suspend the rules and pass the bill unless the engrossed copy is present on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. I demand a second, in order to find out what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. Demand a second on what?

Mr. HAMLIN. On the motion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. He is not through stating the matter.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Now, Mr. Speaker, this same question came before the House on February 28, 1907, as follows:

Mr. WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY of Washington moved to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries from further consideration of the bill (S. 1462) for the establishment of fish-culture stations on Puget Sound, and pass the same.

The motion was made without an engrossed copy of the bill. The Speaker replied:

It is in order to make a motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill, and the motion which has been made is in order.

The SPEAKER. That is not the motion the gentleman made this morning.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The motion I made this morning is not necessarily the motion I present now, but if the Chair rules now it is not in order to suspend the rules and pass the bill without the engrossed copy, I desire to amend by a motion simply to confine it to the first half and to suspend the rules and discharge the committee, and then, in supplementing that, I will ask that the following order be adopted:

Ordered, That the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia deliver forthwith to the House the engrossed copy of the bill S. 7723.

In support of that I will say that the Speaker on a former occasion said:

Debate has been in order, but at the close of the debate, after the bill has been searched for on the files of the committee and does not materialize, the vote can not be taken: the House can not act upon a bill of which it does not have manual possession.

The order proposed by Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington was then agreed to.

The order was as follows:

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to send to the House a duplicate engrossed copy of the bill (S. 1462) to establish one or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound, State of Washington, the original having been lost.

Now, then, suppose every Member upon this floor was desirous and anxious to pass this 8-hour bill, but the chairman of the committee, over in the House Office Building, was barricaded behind his doors, refusing to deliver the engrossed copy to the House, which in effect is what he is doing. Under the precedent which I have read it is in order for the Speaker to entertain a motion to suspend the rules, to discharge the committee, and pass the bill. But under that precedent the Speaker can not put the question upon final passage until the engrossed copy is brought over.

The SPEAKER. He can not put it at any stage of the game, because it is absolutely necessary to have that engrossed copy here, and any other rule would work almost anarchy.

Mr. LAFFERTY. But it is not necessary that the engrossed copy be present or the fact even be ascertained that it is present prior to entertaining the motion to discharge the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never said it was. The Chair rules on matters as they are presented here, and sometimes he goes out of his way to make a suggestion to gentlemen how to get in.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I amend my motion and simply move to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill (S. 7723) to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second to ascertain what the motion is, or else reserve a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee on the District of Columbia from further consideration of the 8-hour bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] desire time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I do not care anything about it.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the motion that the rules be suspended and the Committee on the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of that bill prevail?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask immediate consideration of the order which I send to the Clerk's desk.

RECESS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now take a recess until 10.30.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of this order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves that the House take a recess until 10.30.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 7 minutes a. m.) the House stood in recess until 10.30 a. m.

AFTER RECESS.

At the expiration of the recess the House resumed its session.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill 8540, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, to disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill 8540, disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the Senate bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Let us see what it is.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of Eleanor P. Bigler, widow of Henry W. Bigler, late of Company B, Mormon Battalion, Iowa Volunteers, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Arthur F. Shepherd, late of Company H, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Margaret B. Sherman, widow of Francis H. Sherman, late lieutenant commander, United States Navy, and commodore, United States Navy, retired, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Sally Pickett, widow of George E. Pickett, late captain, Ninth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Petrona B. Freeman, dependent mother of Richard K. Freeman, late of Company B, First Regiment North Carolina Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Emma Z. Gilman, widow of Samuel D. Gilman, late of Company A, First Regiment Idaho Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Ellen Barrett, widow of Henry H. Barrett, late of Captain R. L. Williams's company, Ninth Regiment Oregon Militia Volunteers, Oregon Indian war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James Tiernan, late of Battery G, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery, and Forty-first Company, United States Coast Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Partello, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of James W. Ellis, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John A. Lennon, late of Company E, Seventh Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The name of Estelle H. Wholley, widow of John H. Wholley, late major, Second Regiment United States Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional on account of the minor child of the said John H. Wholley until he reaches the age of 16 years.

The name of Frances P. O'Reilly, widow of Robert M. O'Reilly, late major general and surgeon general, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of Lewis L. Daniel, late of Company K, Fifth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Spain, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Adolph Lochwitz, late of General Mounted Service, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Anna A. Yule, mother of Sherman A. Yule, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. MANN. I do not demand a second.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If a second should be demanded, would it delay the business of the House?

The SPEAKER. It might delay it. Of course if a conference report comes in, the Chair will take anybody off the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I should like very much to get 15 minutes of the time of the House this morning, but I shall not ask for it if it will delay the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. It might do it. The Chair does not think the gentleman will have any trouble about it later.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is this bill?

Mr. MANN. It is a little bill for pensions to veterans of the Wars of 1812, 1846, and so forth.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. JOHN RIVER, MAINE AND NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 28840) authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the St. John River between the town of Van Buren, Me., and the parish of St. Leonards, Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Van Buren Bridge Co., a corporation created by the laws of the State of Maine, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the St. John River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the town of Van Buren, in the county of Aroostook, in the State of Maine, to a point on the opposite side of said river in the parish of St. Leonards, in the county of Madawska, in the Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada; said bridge shall be constructed in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the construction of the said bridge shall not be commenced until the consent of the proper authorities of the Dominion of Canada for the erection of the structure shall have been obtained.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill S. 8399, disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill 8399, disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. ANTHONY. What is this bill?

Mr. MANN. It is a little private pension bill similar to the one which the gentleman from Alabama has just had considered and passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman asks that the bill be read, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who by a special order of the House the other day was granted leave to address the House. If the gentleman will wait, the Chair will try and recognize him later.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY PRESIDENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 875.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members be appointed by the Speaker to join a similar committee to be appointed by the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of this session and are ready to adjourn, unless the President has some communication to make to them.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. SPARKMAN, and Mr. MCCALL.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 8399) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to suspend the rules, discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill which he has mentioned, disagree to the House committee amendments, and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD to explain why the omnibus war claims bill failed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the indulgence of the House for a few minutes for the purpose of stating the causes for the failure of the committee of conference to agree to a report on the items in disagreement between the House and Senate in House bill No. 19115, known as the omnibus war claims bill.

That bill passed the House February 17, 1912, but was not passed by the Senate until January 21, 1913, 11 months and 4 days after it passed the House. The bill was sent to conference February 7, 1913, within less than a month of the expiration of the Sixty-second Congress.

The Senate struck from the House bill 980 items of appropriation for payment of sundry claims. All of the 980 claims had been passed upon by the Court of Claims, and each of the 980 items had been considered by the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By this action of the Senate less than 100 claims appropriated for in the House bill were left in it, amounting in all to a sum of less than $150,000. The 980 claims stricken from the bill by the Senate amounted to a sum in excess of $1,400,000. Speaking in general terms, the Senate practically struck out the entire House bill. The Senate added by way of amendment 15 war claims proper, and in addition added by way of amendment, 1,602 claims not war claims, over which the House Committee on War Claims had no jurisdiction, consisting of 1,230 navy-yard overtime claims, 278 seashore-pay claims, and 94 longevity-pay claims. Twelve of the Senate amendments out of the 15 war claims amendments were for burned churches and lodges.

At the first and second meetings of the conferees, knowing full well that there was not sufficient time before the adjournment of the Sixty-second Congress to consider each and every item on its merits of the more than 2,500 in disagreement, I proposed that all items of the 980 stricken from the House bill by the Senate that had passed both the House and the Senate at former Congresses, amounting to about half of the whole number of stricken-out items, be agreed to in gross as a class, subject to individual exceptions to be specifically pointed out by the Senate conferees, and that in the same way the Senate recede in gross from its disagreement to all other items so stricken out that had passed either the House or Senate in former Congresses, subject to such specific exceptions as might be pointed out by the Senate conferees, and that all other items stricken from the House bill be taken up and considered item by item. A majority of the Senate conferees refused to agree to this method of considering the items stricken from the House bill and insisted that the whole number of said items be taken up and disposed of item by item without regard to whether or not any item had formerly passed either or both Houses. This method involved much labor upon the conferees in the details of the 980 items and made it simply impossible for the House conferees to go over in detail the 1,617 items in disagreement added by way of Senate amendments in the short time at the disposal of the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, on account of the facts I have just stated it has been impossible for the committee of conference on House bill No. 19115 to complete its labors and reach a complete agreement on the vast number of items in disagreement in time to have the report acted on before adjournment of the present Congress at noon to-day.

But it is my purpose, Mr. Speaker, if again honored with the chairmanship of the Committee on War Claims, to reintroduce the same bill and have it reported to the House and passed at the earliest possible day in the extra session of the Sixty-third Congress.

GENERAL DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the general deficiency bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. (H. R. 28858, H. Rept. 1619.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report on the general deficiency bill and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read at length.

[For conference report, see Senate proceedings of this day.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, it has been customary to make a statement as to the total of the appropriations at each session of Congress at the close of the Congress. I am endeavoring to have prepared data which would enable me before this time to make a statement that would sufficiently approximate in giving some information as to the result. It has been absolutely impossible to compile the information so far. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and myself may have leave to insert later in the RECORD a statement regarding the appropriations at this session.

Mr. AUSTIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from New York what became of the item for an extra month's pay for employees in the deficiency bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Senate receded.

Mr. AUSTIN. I object to the consent asked by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the total appropriations for the coming fiscal year largely exceed any appropriations that have been made heretofore.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Has the gentleman from Illinois any figures to justify that statement?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment. I am not going to detain the House at this time, because I want my statements to be accurate but brief. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless that privilege is granted to me, I shall have to object.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can address the House and get leave to revise and extend his remarks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I made a statement and asked unanimous consent, but the gentleman from Tennessee objected.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can move to suspend the rules and grant to me and himself the privilege of making the usual statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] may both extend their remarks in the RECORD on the question of expenditures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] have leave to extend remarks in the RECORD on the subject of expenditures. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the workmen's compensation law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARBURTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of good roads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE TARIFF.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it has been on very rare occasions during my 10 years of service that I have arisen to address this House upon matters not directly under consideration. I hesitate to do so now in these closing hours of the session, when so much necessary legislation is actually trembling in the balance and when great appropriation bills may fall by the board. I ask your indulgence only because the matters of which I shall speak will very soon be of primary importance and will be the first business of the extra session of the next Congress.

It is not my intention to discuss the tariff question in general, but to allude only to a few points brought out in the hearings recently had by the Ways and Means Committee. These hearings began on the 6th of January and closed on the 31st—less than a month. They included every schedule of the tariff law. It must be apparent that in this limited period the information collected was necessarily incomplete and the hearings more or less perfunctory. Where representatives of great industries involving millions of dollars and employing thousands of workmen, speaking not only for the employers but the employees as well, were given only 5 or 10 minutes to present their case, it can not be doubted that the evidence adduced was, to say the least, incomplete and unsatisfactory. Yet even under these circumstances some points were brought out which are well worth the most serious consideration by gentlemen about to undertake the revision of the tariff and by the country.

First, I desire to speak of the effect of tariff duties upon retail prices. It seems to me that the most salient fact brought out during the hearings was the wide difference between the producer's and the retail price of commodities in this country, all of which goes to prove that the grossest misapprehension exists among people even of the highest intelligence as to the effect of tariff duties upon the price that the consumer pays for any article used in his daily life. The testimony throughout shows that the retail price—that is, the price the consumer has to pay—of articles produced in this country, not only in the factory but on the farm as well, is in most instances from two to three and, in some cases, even many more times as high as the price the farmer or the manufacturer gets for the same article. I quote two instances only to show the truth of this general statement:

On page 2666 of the hearings as first published there is a table which shows that the average wholesale price of oranges on January 16, 1913, in Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh was less than 17 cents a dozen, while the retail price was more than 43 cents a dozen.

An interesting instance of the wide diversity between the wholesale and retail price of manufactured articles is to be found on page 3171. A Mr. Chase, a large cotton manufacturer in Massachusetts, detailed to the committee a sale made by him of 50,000 yards of cotton cloth to a retailer at 8½ cents a yard. He says:

I could, at 8½ cents, get possibly a little over a cent a yard profit, but I sold the goods. The man hurried me a good deal for delivery. I went to the city where the merchant did business a short time afterwards and went into the store and wandered around, until I came to the counter and recognized the goods that I had made. I asked the clerk how much it was, and I found it was then selling for 25 cents a yard.

Must it not be apparent that the duty on oranges or cotton cloth or on any article where the difference between the wholesale price and the retail price is so great can have only an infinitesimal effect upon the price the consumer pays?

Take the case of coffee, another article of daily use, upon which there is no duty at all—and we are the only country in the civilized world that does not tax coffee. I have not the figures at hand for the last three or four years, during which I understand that coffee has largely increased in price, but for the 10 years previous the average price of coffee landed at any port in the United States, prepared and ready for consumption, was less than 10 cents a pound, whereas the retail price of the same coffee to the consumer averaged between 25 and 30 cents a pound. It is interesting to note that the difference in the wholesale and retail price of coffee, an article which carries no duty, is just about the same as the difference in wholesale and retail prices of oranges and cotton cloth, articles upon which rather high duties are imposed.

This wide divergence between wholesale and retail prices is, I think, peculiar to this country. Germany, for instance, is a great coffee-drinking country and consumes the same kind of coffee that we do, almost all of it imported from Brazil. There the average import price was the same during the years I have mentioned as ours—that is to say, 10 cents a pound—but the retail price was less than in this country, the average being about 23 cents a pound, and that in spite of the fact that there is a 7 cents a pound duty on coffee in Germany.

In the face of these facts is it not an absurdity to say that the tariff is responsible for the high cost of living in this country? You must seek for other remedies, gentlemen, than the general reduction of the tariff if you desire seriously to reduce the cost of living.

I think that the real reason why there is so much misinformation as to the effect that tariff duties have upon the price the consumer pays is that people, even of great intelligence, do not stop to differentiate between the price paid for goods actually imported and similar goods produced in this country. If a man buys a suit of clothes in England, brings it back with him, and pays the duty upon it, of course the whole of the duty is added to his cost. If he buys in this country goods actually imported, the duty is probably added to the price he pays; but if he buys similar goods actually produced in this country, the duty, whether high or low, is by no means added to his cost. This was abundantly shown in the report of the Tariff Board on wool, and is to be found on page 14 of their report:

On the other hand, prices in this country on the fabrics just referred to are not increased by the full amount of the duty. A collection of representative samples was made in England of goods ranging from those which can not be imported at all to those which are imported continually. These were then matched with a collection of samples of American-made cloths which were fairly comparable and the mill prices compared for the same date. It is found that on goods entirely excluded the nominal rates of duty would reach an ad valorem rate of 150 or even over 200 per cent, but that the American fabric is actually sold in the market at from only 60 to 80 per cent higher than similar goods sold abroad.

On 16 samples of foreign goods, for instance, none of which are imported, the figures are as follows:

Total of foreign prices	$41.84
Duties which would have been assessed had they been imported	76.90
Foreign price, plus the duty, if imported	118.74
Actual domestic price of similar fabrics	69.75

Thus, though the nominal rates on such fabrics equal 184 per cent, the actual excess of the domestic price over the foreign price on similar fabrics of this kind is about 67 per cent. This is the result of domestic competition.

Many examples of this kind are shown in the hearings. On page 3890, during a colloquy between myself and a manufacturer of woolen goods, I asked the witness whether the duty was added to the price of goods manufactured and sold in this country, and he replied:

Absolutely not, Mr. LONGWORTH. There is no attention paid to that duty.

Later on I asked him whether the duty has any effect upon the price to the ultimate consumer, and he again replied: "Absolutely not."

Later on I asked this question:

There is, then, an absolute definite and sharp dividing line between what the consumer pays for an article actually imported and one that he pays for a precisely similar article manufactured in this country?

His reply was: "Surely."

I think it can be said with absolute authority that there are few cases, if any, where the whole of the duty is added to the price the producer gets for an article actually produced in this country, and that in the vast majority of cases only a very small portion of the duty, if any, is, in fact, added to the producer's price. As a matter of fact, there are many things being sold to-day in this country at a price actually less than the duty.

I do not intend to be considered as using this as an argument for unnecessarily high duties. The mere fact that in the case mentioned by the Tariff Board only a small per cent of the duty of 150 per cent is added to the price of goods produced here does not in itself present a good ground for maintaining a duty of 150 per cent. In my judgment such duties should be greatly reduced. I intend it only as an argument to combat the statement so generally made by those opposed to protection in any degree that the tariff is a tax which the consumer pays, whether the article is imported or not. This is an absolute misstatement of fact, and it is most unfortunate that so many people seem to believe it.

The question may be asked, "If it is true that the duty on articles produced in this country is not added to the cost to the consumer, where does it go?" My answer is that where the duty is anywhere near the point required to measure the difference in the cost of articles produced in this country and abroad, it goes to labor. The record of the hearings fairly bristle with examples of this sort. I made it a point to bring out testimony of this kind wherever it was possible, and there was hardly a day during the progress of the hearings that the statement was not made by some American producer that if he could pay the same rate of wages paid by his competitors abroad he would not need or ask for any protection at all.

For instance, on page 4151 occurs a colloquy between myself and Mr. Craddock, representing the boot and shoe industry in this country. There I asked him this direct question:

If you could pay to people in your factory, or if your competitors generally could pay the people in their factories, the same rate of wages that are paid in European factories, would you need any duty on shoes?

And he replied:

Absolutely none, if we could pay the same wages.

Later on I asked practically the same question of Mr. McElwain, also representing the boot and shoe industry, a gentleman who was highly complimented by the chairman of the committee on the thoroughness of his presentation of his case, and I quote here what was said:

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would you be willing to waive the advantage that England has with reference to rates of material and to overhead charges if you could pay the same rate of wages that they do there?
Mr. MCELWAIN. In other words, to put us on a competitive condition in this country?
Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; so far as the labor cost is concerned.
Mr. MCELWAIN. So far as labor and other items, would we be willing?
Mr. LONGWORTH. Would you be willing to waive your disadvantage in material and overhead charges if you could reduce your labor cost to the same cost?
Mr. MCELWAIN. Yes, sir.
Mr. LONGWORTH. In other words, this 15 per cent goes entirely to labor?
Mr. MCELWAIN. Yes, sir; there is no question about it.

A statement of the same kind was made by Mr. George A. Tenney, representing the cotton industry. On page 3456 the following colloquy occurred:

Mr. LONGWORTH. All you are asking is to be put on the same basis as to your labor cost?
Mr. TENNEY. Yes, sir; that is what it amounts to.
Mr. LONGWORTH. You do not want protection on your energy or brains, or anything of that kind?
Mr. TENNEY. No, sir.
Mr. LONGWORTH. If you paid the same rate of wages they are paying in England now, you would not need any protection?
Mr. TENNEY. I would not need any.
Mr. LONGWORTH. In view of the fact you have to pay the American wage scale protection is necessary?
Mr. TENNEY. I think it is necessary; absolutely necessary.
Mr. LONGWORTH. And that is all you are asking?
Mr. TENNEY. That is all we are asking for.

There is abundance of testimony to this effect also from the workmen themselves. A very large number of gentlemen representing the labor unions appeared before the committee, all protesting against a reduction of the duty on the goods produced by them, upon the express ground that the existing duties go to labor and that any cut would result either in the reduction of their wages or the loss of their employment. I have not time to quote from any of these statements, and I will only refer to as typical that made by Mr. J. M. Neenan, representing the National Window Glass Workers, at pages 634 and 636 of the hearings.

Given the fact, as is conclusively established, that the American in every line of industry receives wages at least twice as high as those paid to workmen in any other competing country; given the fact that the American employer is making only a reasonable profit, and that a fair share of that profit is finding its way into the pay envelope; given the further fact that the American producer is almost invariably at a disadvantage in cost of material and overhead charges as compared with his rival abroad, does it not stand to reason that a cut in duties below the difference in the production cost must necessarily cause a cut in the contents of the pay envelope?

This description of conditions I believe applies to the great majority of American industries to-day. Here and there, of course, we find duties which are absolutely prohibitory and which offer to the producer a possible opportunity, whether he actually takes advantage of it or not, to make unreasonable profits. Here and there, of course, we may find instances where a fair share of the profits is not finding its way into the pay envelope. It is not such duties as these that we who believe in a system of reasonable protection are seeking to defend. We do not advocate duties to protect unreasonable profits. We do not stand for the coddling of industries by the use of the tariff-making power of Congress where profits are being unfairly divided between employer and employee; but we do contend that the fact that such cases may exist is no excuse for recklessly applying the pruning knife to tariff duties everywhere, with the inevitable result that the chief sufferer in the end will be the American workingman.

It is a favorite argument nowadays of those who are opposed to the principle of protection that, admitting the truth of the fact that American wages are at least twice as high as in any other country, our labor is so much more efficient than labor anywhere else as to more than make up for the additional cost to the American employer. This argument has been used frequently in speeches made upon the other side of the aisle, and notably by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD]. The trouble with the gentleman's argument is that he invariably cites extreme cases. He has said, for instance, if I remember rightly, that he would rather have 1 American carpenter do a job for him than 20 Chinese carpenters. He might have cited a more extreme case than that. When I was in Canton, China, six or seven years ago I remember talking with an English gentleman who was engaged in building a line of railroad. One of the principal pieces of work that had to be done was the cutting down of a hill and placing it in a hollow. He had to rely on Chinese laborers, whose equipment consisted of a small basket, which they filled with material dug from the hill and carried on their heads and dumped in the hollow, a quarter of a mile away. The work was proceeding so slowly that, thinking to expedite matters, this gentleman ordered a large shipment of wheelbarrows and showed the Chinamen how to use them. What was his surprise the next day to see them coming down from the hill with the wheelbarrows loaded with dirt upon their heads. No amount of argument convinced these Chinamen that there was any other proper way to carry dirt except on their heads, as their ancestors for thousands of years had done before them. Comparisons between the efficiency of this sort of labor and of American labor, equipped with modern tools, is merely ridiculous; but such instances as these have no bearing whatever upon actual labor conditions in this country and in those enlightened countries like Germany, France, and England, with which we are in competition in almost every line of production.

Of course, as a general proposition it is true that a workman who is well clothed, well fed, and well housed has an advantage in efficiency over another who is poorly fed, poorly clothed, and poorly housed. In this respect American workmen have an advantage over their competitors in any other country, and this is largely because laborers abroad are willing to do without those things which have become necessities under the American standard of living. But from this it does not follow that American labor is anything like doubly or trebly as efficient as foreign labor costing only one-half or one-third as much in wages. As a matter of fact, in many highly competitive industries, as, for instance, the chemical, metal, and woolen industries, American labor is no more efficient—and ofttimes even less efficient—than similar labor in Germany, England, and France. Under these conditions the scaling of duties down to a point below that necessary to make up the difference in the actual production cost must inevitably be felt by labor, and if applied throughout the tariff schedules must inevitably result either in the discontinuance of these industries here or the scaling down of wages to a point somewhere near the wages of foreign labor, and in the end this will affect not only the wages of men actually employed in protected industries but in industries also which are usually classed as non-protected. There can be no general cut in the wages of factory hands without a cut following in the wages of carpenters and bricklayers and workingmen generally. The wages of men of whom is required substantially the same degree of effort, industry, and skill must always be at about the same level, no matter what their particular industry may be. If we are to preserve the American wage scale in all forms of industry, we must preserve duties which shall at least protect the wages of workmen who are in active competition with workmen abroad.

I shall feel that I have been justified in submitting these observations if I have been able to bring out clearly the two points which it seems to me have been developed by these tariff hearings more fully than ever before—first, how little the tariff has to do with retail prices and how greatly it has to do with producers' prices—in other words, how the American citizen, whether employer or employee, as a producer, is vitally affected by tariff duties on the article which he produces and how remotely he is affected as a consumer by the tariff on the articles he consumes. Is it possible to substantially reduce retail prices through the medium of lowering the tariff merely without reducing producers' prices below a living point? In other words, can you reduce substantially the cost of living through the tariff-making power of Congress without diminishing the purchasing power of the people of the Nation? That is the problem that will confront the party in power in the next Congress, and upon its wise solution you will stand or fall.

In my judgment you are doomed to failure. I do not believe that general prosperity in this country can be maintained under a policy of tariff for revenue only. I agree that much depends upon how that policy is to be construed and applied. If applied in one way it would have no effect whatever upon the cost of living. If applied in another it would probably reduce the cost of living, but only at the expense of the ruin of the industries and the business of this country. Applied as it has been in some of the bills which passed this House in the last session of Congress it will give needlessly high protection to some industries and worse than free trade to others, for your newly invented policy of placing the finished product of the American producer on the free list and maintaining duties on all the intermediate products is worse than free trade and can be justified by no existing theory of political economy. This policy was, I think, well and tersely characterized by one witness who appeared before the committee, Mr. Neal Brown, a very eminent Democrat, who denominated it the "illegitimate offspring of unknown parentage," and his discussion of this question on page 2214 is worth reading.

The worst feature of your tariff-for-revenue program is that you make it mean one thing at one time and quite another thing at another. During the campaign last fall your cry throughout the country was that you would reduce the cost of living to the American people by abolishing all duties maintained under the protective principle of allowing for the difference in the cost of production of articles produced in this country and abroad, and yet repeatedly prominent Democrats came before the committee during the hearings and argued that the pledges of the Democratic Party to the people meant no such thing. Mr. Joseph S. Auerbach, for instance, a lawyer of distinction, a prominent Democrat in New York and one who took an active part in the campaign, appeared twice before the committee, on one occasion advocating an increased duty on plate glass and on another an increased duty on ball bearings. He rested his case upon the Democratic platform and the assurances of Democratic leaders as to what that platform meant. On page 748 the following occurs in his testimony:

> It is true that you are to have before you the duty of living up to the pledges of the Democratic Party to the people; but as a Democrat by principle and practice I have no fear of them rightly interpreted. We are not, however, to confuse ourselves as to what were those pledges even though prepared to accept them at their face value.

And later, having argued in favor of an increased duty on plate glass, he said:

> In all this, however, the solemn promise was that there would be taken into account and allowed for the difference in cost of production here and abroad. The chairman of this committee again and again has expressed this view forcibly, eloquently, and persuasively, too, as the result of the last election makes abundantly clear.

On page 1208 of the hearings will be found the following colloquy between Mr. Auerbach and myself upon the question of what the promise or covenant of the Democratic Party with the American people people really meant:

> Mr. LONGWORTH. I have heard you say several times to-day and the other day that it was a part of the covenant of the Democratic Party with the people, in considering this question of tariff revision, to make a tariff on a revenue basis and take into consideration the question of the cost of production of articles manufactured in the country with the cost of production of similar articles manufactured abroad. I would like to know, for my own information, where you find any mention of that covenant either in the Democratic platform or in any utterances of the Democratic leaders during the last few years.
> Mr. AUERBACH. I find it everywhere, wherever the question has been discussed. I find it in all of the deliberations here, and I find that you are trying to learn the difference between the cost abroad and the cost at home.
>
> Mr. LONGWORTH. Where do you find in the utterance of any Democratic leader the use of the phrase "the difference in the cost of production here and abroad"? Can you cite me to any utterance?
> Mr. AUERBACH. Yes, sir; I will hand you privately some declarations of some gentleman whom you would concede to be the leaders of the Democratic Party.

Great heavens, Mr. Speaker, has it come to this, that the covenants of the great Democratic Party are to be construed through the medium of private letters, that the real meaning of their pledges of tariff revision are to be taken not from their platform, not from the declarations of their leaders upon the stump or upon the floor of Congress, but from assurances privately given to great business interests which must remain concealed from the light of day? Was this the reason why your treasure chests were so overflowing in the last campaign? Was this the reason why many of the great moneyed interests of the country viewed with such serene complacency your enthronement in power? Are your campaign promises to reduce the cost of living to yield eventually to the "covenants" made by your leaders with big business?

I did not accept Mr. Auerbach's offer to peruse these covenants. I do not know and did not ask who were the "leaders" referred to. I entirely absolve any member of the Ways and Means Committee from any complicity in or knowledge of these things. But for some reason or other, slowly but surely, as it seems to me, the theory that the result of your tariff revision will substantially reduce the cost of living is being abandoned. On page 3171 the gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, whose superior knowledge of the tariff question none will dispute, had this to say:

> I recognize, of course, the great difference between the wholesale price and the retail price, but this committee can not adjust that.

And later, at page 3246, in reply to a question asked by Mr. Howard, who was on the witness stand:

> Mr. Chairman, do you think that the consumer will get the benefit of this?

That is to say, the general abolishment of all protective duties.

> The CHAIRMAN. Well, we hope he will. We think he will on some articles; on some articles he probably will not.

This is a mighty milk-and-water assurance, to say the least, to the American consumer, of any benefit that may come to him from the tariff revision you contemplate. If this is to be the result—or, rather, the lack of result—of this revision, your pledges made to the people in the last campaign were made with intent to mislead or else you have found that they can not be lived up to.

The truth of it all is that it is a "condition and not a theory that confronts you." You have come to a realization of the fact that the tariff is not responsible for the increased cost of living in the last few years in this country. You have come to the conclusion that nothing short of a most radical reduction all along the line will have any perceptible effect upon consumers' prices, and you fear to go that far lest the whole industrial and business structure of this country come clattering down upon you. You hesitate to grasp either horn of the dilemma. You are still in doubt whether to put through a revision which will not cause great business disturbance but which will not reduce the cost of living at all, or, on the other hand, whether your one object shall be to reduce the cost of living at no matter what the damage to the industries and purchasing power of the people of the Nation.

In all I have said I do not wish to be considered as questioning for a moment the sincerity or high purpose of my colleagues on the majority side of the Ways and Means Committee. For every one of them I have the highest regard and esteem. I have formed many friendships with gentlemen on the other side which it consoles me to believe, now that I am about to retire from service with them, will endure as long as I live.

Mr. Speaker, during the 10 years that I have served here I have frequently had sharp debates with gentlemen upon the other side of this House. I confess that I have sometimes stated my opinion of Democratic policies with perhaps brutal frankness, but I have never questioned, and I do not now, the purity or patriotism of the motives that animate gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, either as individuals or as a party. For the Speaker of this House I entertain the most unbounded affection and esteem. I admire him as a statesman and I like him as a man. [Applause.] There is no gift in the power of the American people to bestow, no office to which he could be elected, that he would not adorn even as he adorns the Speakership. [Applause.]

Just a word as to another great Democratic leader, whom I have the good fortune to know intimately. I have never met a more able, upright, and honorable man than is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. [Applause.] I hold him to be a scholar and a gentleman in all that those two terms imply, and I say of him, too, as I have said of the Speaker, that he would worthily fill any office in the gift of the people of this country. [Applause.] I only wish, Mr. Speaker, if we are to have a law modeled on the principle of tariff for revenue only that the gentleman from Alabama could write it himself. I would be glad to see such a tariff law go on the statute books, because I know that every item in it would be dictated by principle, and not by pressure or political expediency. But I have no hope that any tariff bill written by the gentleman from Alabama will go upon the statute books. I fear that when that bill has finally run the gantlet of this House and of the Senate the gentleman from Alabama will not know his own handiwork, and that the bill will in its final analysis represent the result not so much of rigid adherence to principle as of a series of trades in which the big fellow will get the best of it and the little fellow will get the worst of it.

If I have learned anything during my service on the Committee on Ways and Means it is this, that no thoroughly accurate, scientific, permanently satisfactory bill can be enacted unless it is based upon the findings of a permanent nonpartisan high-powered tariff commission. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And I believe that the day is not far distant when the tariff will be revised by a party which is committed to that principle. Mr. Speaker, in the seclusion of private life I shall watch with interest the labors of my colleagues on the other side of the House. With all respect to their patriotism and the purity of their motives, I fear that they are doomed to failure, because I do not believe that any tariff which ignores the principle of protection can make for the general prosperity of the people of this country. If I am right, the time may not be far distant when I shall be here again. [Applause.] But whatever the future may have in store for me, I know you will believe me to be sincere when I say that I wish every man in this House the best that life may afford of health, happiness, and prosperity. [Loud applause.] Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, in these closing hours of eulogies and swan songs, mingled with messages from the Executive and from the Senate and reports of committees of conference, I avail myself of the courtesy extended by the House for a very few brief observations.

My service here has not been very long—only four years—but long enough to make many good friends, so that the pain of being violently separated from the pay roll is far from being the only regret at retiring from the House. Nor have my friends been limited to one side of the big aisle, as it is so often called by our fair, courteous, and much-beloved Speaker. They are quite as numerous on the Democratic side as on our own, and in the present Congress even more, for there are so many more of them. To all of these I wish to say that I appreciate more than I can express their many courtesies, and more than all the fact that it has been my privilege to here enjoy the friendship of so many good fellows. I shall treasure the memory of my association here with you while life lasts.

I go away with mingled feelings of regret and relief. It is not necessary to tell any of you that the path of a Congressman is not strewn all the way with roses; that each rose is situated between two thorns is not an inapt figure of speech. To take part in the actual work of this House, to study not only the bills and reports, but even the hearings before committees, and to follow intelligently the legislation enacted here is a most delightful though strenuous task. To attend to the numerous and multifarious requests of individual constituents, though often difficult, is always both pleasant and interesting. The hardest part to bear is the unfair criticism of those to whose interest it is to oppose you or of others instigated by them; and it has been my experience as well as my observation that a large proportion of the sum total of unjust criticism leveled against men in all ranks of public life is traceable to such poisoned sources.

It is not pleasant for an honest man to attempt to deceive, even though the purpose of the deception be to make folks at home think you the greatest man in Congress next to the Speaker; and yet it must be done if you would tarry here. Everybody's doing it. I should be ashamed to look myself in the face if through the instrumentality of sympathetic newspaper correspondents I should find myself so puffed up in the home papers that my colleagues here would not be able to recognize the likeness; and yet such practices are frequent, as they are, also, potent. So through the catalogue of pleasant and unpleasant things connected with public service—and I am not certain in which scale rests the preponderance of testimony. When away from the life here, its joys and its cares, one may be able to gain the right perspective and make a just estimate as to the permanent value of service here.

Apropos of the closing sentiments of the speech of my friend from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] I here submit a few lines of hastily constructed verse. Except as therein otherwise specified the sentiment is entirely impersonal and includes all who believe in all that is best in the party represented by this side of the House. The gentleman from Ohio has said, "Au revoir, but not good-by." I have attempted to put the same sentiment into verse.

QUACK-QUACK OF THE LAME DUCKS.

Republican aquatic birds,
We're lame, as you may see,
From cares of state and long debate
We are to be set free.
We fought the battle bravely, and were
Vanquished in the fray,
Some think we ne'er shall fight again,
I rather think we may;
And we'll come back; yes, we'll come back—
Two years, or four, and we'll come back.

We hadn't even half a chance
To win out in the fight,
But held our banners high aloft
And battled for the right;
Our party sorely rent in twain,
The opposition strong;
Result—we now are leaving you,
But not for very long.
For we'll come back; yes, we'll come back—
Two years, or four, will bring us back.

McKINLEY, HILL, and LONGWORTH, too,
DALZELL and PRINCE and others,
And many called Progressives true
Are going with their brothers.
Such fate dissension brought to all;
If licking's what was needed,
'Twas quite enough. The lesson learned,
It surely will be heeded;
And they'll come back; yes, all come back;
Two years, or four, will bring them back.

Our virile Uncle JOE, alas!
Is also booked to go;
Regretted much by everyone,
By friend not more than foe.
When Danville district voters wake
To look about and find
How much they've lost by what they've done
They'll surely change their mind,
And send him back; yes, send him back—
Two years, not more, will bring him back.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. For the purpose of asking unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. What I have to say being prepared, I am quite sure of not running beyond the time allotted to me.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman ask?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. For 15 minutes, or such portion of that time as I may need.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes or such portion thereof as he may desire. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, while I should very much like to hear my friend and very good colleague on the committee to which I am assigned [Mr. MARTIN of Colorado], yet I would like to ask whether, in the opinion of the Chair, that would preclude me from moving at this hour to suspend the rules and pass a bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. No; it will not after the gentleman concludes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MADISON.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I come to lay forget-me-nots upon the shrine of the memory of my friend and colleague, ED. MADISON, to refer to an incident in our earlier lives that eventually touched our hearts into deep and satisfying fellowship, and to say a final word as a Member of Congress, from which I am now about to retire, for reasons to which I shall allude only briefly and impersonally, and as they affect many of the Members of Congress, living and dead.

Twenty years ago a young locomotive fireman whiled away a long lay-over at Dodge City, Kans., by sitting in the rear of the court room and listening to the trial of a case. Unused to such scenes it made a deep impression upon him—the solemnity of it, the learned ability of the judge on the bench, the forensic combats of the lawyers at the bar, the tense interest of the community; but he was particularly impressed with the personality and ability of the leading lawyer for the defense, a young man, black haired, clean shaven, square of jaw and shoulder, the music of a strong, keen voice tuned to the pitch and playing the scale of natural oratory, definiteness and precision in his method, weight, and compelling in his manner.

They did not meet, the fireman and the lawyer, but the former went his way with the clear image of the latter graven upon his memory by eyes of desire; and many times afterwards his mind went back to the scene in the court room and its central figure. As the years went by he often thought of the young lawyer and made inquiry, learning first that he had become district judge and finally that he had been elected to Congress; but still they did not meet, and never met until, after the lapse of 16 years, they met in this Chamber as the Representatives of adjoining States and contiguous congressional districts.

It is the commonest triteism that truth is stranger than fiction, for no sane imagination, projecting itself from the little court room, could have foreseen the day when the young lawyer, as a distinguished Member of Congress, would be making what proved to be his last speech upon the floor of the House, and having as a warm friend and colleague among the assembled Members his unknown auditor of that other day.

But the people of that prairie community had gone down into the sand hills of the Arkansas, and in a little prairie schoolhouse had found a young lawyer-teacher, had called him into the public service, and had seen that with each advance he justified their estimate and enlarged their concept of his worth until, in his all too brief tenure in the Halls of Congress, he had risen distinctly into leadership and had begun to make his impress, not only upon his colleagues regardless of party, but upon the political institutions and the legislation of this great country.

It is a romance and it is a marvel, yet it is so common that we may easily overlook its deep significance. For it typifies America and spells her enduring greatness. Her imperishable hope and her indestructible guaranty is the capacity for leadership, for statesmanship, resident in the body politic; the ED. MADISONS in the little schoolhouses, in the little court rooms, on the farms, on the railroads, in the mines and mills, everywhere and in all callings and walks of life, fitting for and awaiting the summons to higher service. Surely we have only to look about us for undoubting assurance that no matter how deep and dark the valleys of our national life, how high and forbidding its steeps, we shall level those lifts and pass on to greater and yet greater heights.

But I have not yet summed up the value as a statesman of our departed friend and colleague. It was not all in his physical impress, not all in his magnetic personality, not all in his natural gift of oratory or his ability in debate, not all in his integrity and courage of conviction, though he had all these attributes in rich measure. Above all these his distinguishing characteristic was sound judgment. This rarest of faculties, even in men of the greatest gifts, equaled the sum of all his other gifts, was the crowning attribute of the man, and, added to these others assured him high and yet higher place in the councils of the Nation.

But in the morning of a statesman's career and in the forefront of the fray which still rends our national political life, and with heart and brain teeming with the problems pressing for solution, broken by the burden, he fell as a soldier falls, as so many of his colleagues have fallen, and was laid to rest, his mourners all who knew him, his couch the brown bosom of his western plains, his shroud the waving prairie blue stem, his requiem the prairie's ever-blowing winds. He has gone whence he came.

A Ship of Mist sailed out of a cloud,
Out of a cloud at the sunrise time;
The glint of the dawn was on sail and shroud,
The glint of the dawn of the sunrise clime.
Into the blue from the harbor gray,
Into the blue of the living day,
Into the vast, she sailed away.

"Ahoy, lone sailor; what of the voyage?"
"I've neither chart nor bearing, friend."

A Ship of Mist sailed into a cloud,
Into a cloud at the sunset time;
The shade of the dusk was on sail and shroud,
The shade of the dusk of the sunset clime.
Into the gloom with the dying light,
Into the gloom of the endless night,
Into the vast, she sailed from sight.

"Ahoy, lone sailor; what of the voyage?"
"I'm past the care of caring, friend."

But let me digress a moment from the beaten path of individual eulogies; let me come close to other thoughts and feelings that press upon my heart and mind. During this term of Congress this has been many times a house of mourning. If every seat in this Chamber vacated by death during this term of Congress were draped with its sable emblems, it would present a most solemn spectacle. And if this spectacle could be seen by the country and its significance understood, it would give pause to much criticism. But even these vacant chairs and black-suited desks would not take the toll of those who fall here, and whose seats are vacated and whose careers are ended or broken by the strain, as surely as those who pay as well the forfeit of life itself. Beyond doubt a congressional career is now in its demands the most severe and exacting of all careers. The life of a Congressman has become a ceaseless struggle. He is in Congress fighting, or at home campaigning, keyed always to high pitches of feeling and effort, and besieged always with demands which grow with his ability to feed them.

I have little patience with the popular witticisms about the life in Congress, its ease, its emoluments, its pleasures. The truth is, Congress in its personnel typifies largely the survival of the fittest, and is made up in the main of men who would not remain in public life a single day were it not for the great honor which is the due of that greatest of all services in the cause of human progress, public service.

Although a poor man, I would despise myself to think that I came to Congress for its ease, its emoluments, or its pleasures. I came because the seed was born in me and because the honor of its service was the ambition of my life. And when I say this of myself I state what I believe to be the rule and not the exception. I shall go hence, reserving the right and discharging the duty to criticize the public acts of the Members of Congress, but with respect born of knowledge and experience for the lot of the Congressman, the great and varied measure of his duties, the cankering character of his responsibilities, the integrity of his motives, and the courage of his actions.

I have not spoken of Mr. MADISON in his private life as a husband, father, and citizen, but I know that in these relations he was all that we hope for our own, and the cottage in which he dwelt, surrounded by wife and children, was enshrined in the hearts of unenvious friends and neighbors, to all of whom his public career was an unmixed pride and his death a personal loss. Measured by dollars, he died a poor man; but, measured by deeds, he lived a rich life, and left to his family and kindred the legacy of that good name which is more to be desired than great wealth, to struggling youth the stimulus and example of his own climb from obscurity to eminence, to his friends the memory of a just man whose light shone brighter with increase of radius, and to the archives of his country the record of a faithful and efficient public servant.

Having spent the last years of my boyhood upon a farm in the district which he later represented in Congress and which has been the home of my people for 30 years and where my mother sleeps, having passed the first years of my manhood upon a railway division of which his home city was a terminal, having had the honor at his invitation of being the guest of that community, and being bound to it all by so many tender ties, it is to me a peculiarly sad privilege and pleasure to pay his character and memory this tribute of my esteem and love, and not inappropriate, I trust, in the light of all the circumstances, to have enlarged upon it by personal and related references and by touching upon a phase of life in the National Congress which so nearly concerns so many of its Members.

To the family of EDWARD H. MADISON, who must continue the unmarked way of life without his strong, sure, and protecting guidance, I wish all the solace and strength that may come from the contemplation of all that he was to them, to the community, and to the country; and to those who are to tarry yet a little time upon the scenes where his labors have closed I wish health, honor, and achievement while in the arena of public action and peace and content when they retire.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT ON THE SUNDRY CIVIL BILL (H. DOC. NO. 1451).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a veto message of the President of the United States.

[For message, see Senate proceedings of this day.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill (H. R. 28775), the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves that the House on reconsideration pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, and on this the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 264, nays 48, answered "present" 3, not voting 66, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

REORGANIZATION OF CUSTOMS SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 1450.)

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

[For message, see Senate proceedings of March 3, 1913.]

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will please take the chair.

Mr. CANNON assumed the chair amidst loud applause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CANNON). The House is in order, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, with a pleasure which wells from the bottom of my heart and as a token of tribute to the splendid ability of our Speaker and as an evidence of the affectionate regard in which every Member holds him, I rise to offer the following highly privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The CLERK read as follows:

House resolution 877.

Resolved, That the thanks of this House are presented to the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, its honored and distinguished Speaker, for the able, impartial, courteous, and dignified manner in which he has presided over its deliberations and performed the arduous and important duties of the Chair during the present term of Congress, now about to end.

[Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, and the Chair hears none, the resolution is agreed to. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment, bills of the following titles:

H. R. 28840. An act authorizing the construction of a railroad bridge across the St. John River, between the town of Van Buren, Me., and the parish of St. Leonards, Province of New Brunswick, Dominion of Canada;

H. R. 21849. An act for the relief of Felix Morgan; and

H. R. 28098. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Sabine River at Orange, Tex.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

In compliance with the foregoing resolution the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WARREN and Mr. MARTIN as said committee.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON PRESIDENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The committee appointed on the part of the House to act with the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that the House was about to adjourn, and ask him if there were any further communications to be laid before the House, desire to report that they have performed their duty, and the President of the United States informs them that he has no further communications to make.

THANKS TO THE SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The office of Speaker in the House of Representatives is a great office, with great responsibilities, requiring uniform courtesy, patience, and, at times, forbearance. Many men have filled this great office during my service—Blaine, Kerr, Randall, Keifer, Carlisle, Reed, Crisp, and Henderson, and the present Speaker of the House. At times the popular body, abounding in partisanship, directly representing the people, rendering an account every two years, seemingly is not only enthusiastic, but in its enthusiasm is sometimes severe; and yet this present body, as was the case with former Congresses, when the blood cools, has ever been ready to accord deserved indorsement to the presiding officer, whoever he might be, from one Congress to another.

I had long service with the gentleman from Missouri, the Speaker of the House. His ability is known throughout the length and breadth of the land and is fully appreciated. Few men in the history of the Republic have had stronger public indorsement than the Speaker of the House [applause], and from observation throughout my long service in this body I take pleasure in saying that during his speakership no man has presided with greater fairness and with greater courtesy. [Applause.]

Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on Senate bill 5068.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the bill indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks on the eight-hour law, relating to the employment of females, that was up for consideration this morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the bill named. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair amid general applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, I would have a heart of stone if I were not deeply sensible of this manifestation of the esteem and confidence of this House.

It is a great thing to be Speaker of this body. I violate no confidence in stating that within 30 minutes from now I could have been sworn in as Vice President of the United States if I had wanted to be, but I preferred to stay with you. [Prolonged applause.]

I would have preferred to serve in this House even if I had had no belief that I would be reelected Speaker. The greatest pleasure that I shall have in life as a public man will be to remember the unfailing kindness, the entire courtesy, and the unwavering friendship of the Members of the House of the Sixty-second Congress [applause], and that remark applies equally on the two sides of the great aisle. [Applause.]

I have worked hard to discharge the duties of the Speakership faithfully, intelligently, and with absolute impartiality, and am proud of your approval. It is a rich heritage for my children and my children's children.

I was greatly pleased to have the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I have overruled him more frequently and sustained him more frequently than all the other Members of the House put together. [Laughter and applause.]

I was delighted to have my venerable and well-beloved friend, the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, preside on this occasion. [Applause.] We fight in this House, but we fight like men; and, considering the heat of the fight, I do not believe that any other body of men was ever assembled in the world where there is so little permanent animosity growing out of the proceedings. May God bless you all.

And not to detain the House, because time presses, I again thank you, and I wish for every Member, whether he is coming back or not, a safe return to his home and long life, happiness, prosperity, and peace of mind. [Applause.]

The House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress stands adjourned without day.

PETITIONS, ETC.
